NINTH REGIMENT.

In default of a history of the gallant deeds of this noble regiment, from some hand which has wielded the sabre in its ranks and is competent to record its wanderings, its hardships and its triumphs, we are permitted to extract from a sketch of the life of Major Brown, furnished by Rev. J. H. Gilmore, such portions as relate to the regiment with which he was so long identified.

The Ninth Regiment left Concord, where a portion of it had long been encamped, for the front, (which then meant the defences of Washington,) on the 25th of August, and was soon encamped at Arlington Heights. It was the darkest hour of the rebellion. Pope's broken and dispirited legions were falling back upon the national capital. Lee had invaded Maryland, and was marching on Harrisburg. The Ninth New Hampshire composed of raw and undisciplined troops, strangers to their officers and to each other, destitute of tents and camp equipage, were ordered to join in the pursuit of Lee's victorious legions, and if possible, check his advance. They entered upon their task with commendable spirit and passed swiftly through Leesborough, Monocacy and Frederick, Maryland, to the vicinity of Middletown, where they participated in the battle of South Mountain on Sunday, September 14th, within three weeks of the day on which they left their homes.

Again, on Wednesday, September 18th, the regiment took an humble part (which was magnified by fulsome eulogists into the achievement of prodigies of valor) in the great and decisive battle of Antietam ; charging once upon a strong position with an impetuosity which the rebels did not stay to resist; but, for the greater part of the conflict exposed, without protection, to the enemy's shell with no opportunity to fire a shot in return. The regiment acquitted themselves with credit in this trying position, although their Lieut-Colonel was seriously wounded and the dispiriting influence of losses, which could be met only by patient endurance, told upon a regiment to which arms had been given within a month. On the night of the battle the honorable task of guarding Antietam Bridge, which it had cost Burnside eight hundred lives to take, was entrusted to the Ninth. It was a night of sleepless anxiety; but the morning found the rebels in full retreat, and the regiment pressed on to Pleasant Valley, crossing Elk Mountain without a single halt.

The regiment to which General Burnside entrusted the guarding of Antietam Bridge, shared of course in his subsequent Virginia campaign, and was one of those which were hurled on the 13th of December with vain, but conspicuous valor, against the Heights of Fredericksburg. On that fatal plain, across which the rebel shot and shell swept with the fury of a tornado, our regiment left scores of their bravest and best. They fought till night-fall. and in the evacuation of the city, held the outposts nearest the enemy till most of our forces had crossed the Rappahannock.

With confidence no whit abated in their gallant but unfortunate commander, the ninth corps cheerfully followed him to Kentucky and Tennessee, where the Ninth New Hampshire won an enviable reputation for its courteous and soldierly deportment in the discharge of provost and garrison duty. This holiday soldiering was soon to be exchanged however for the stern reality of war in its most brutal form.

On the 4th of June, 1863, the regiment left Crab Orchard, Kentucky, and after a tedious journey by rail to Cairo, embarked on the Father of Waters for Vicksburg. It took no immediate part in the siege of that celebrated strong hold, being stationed at Harris' Bluff, twenty miles up the Yazoo. There was fatigue duty enough to perform, however, joined with the scanty fare and the pestilential climate, to render its position irksome in the extreme; and an occasional reconnoisance taxed its powers of physical endurance and kept it inured to danger and death.

On the fall of Vicksburg, the Ninth New Hampshire joined the column which pushed into the interior in pursuit of the rebel Johnston, and participated in the battle which was fought near Jackson, Mississippi, on the 12th and 13th of July, 1863. The tactics adopted by the enemy on this occasion, were those of savage rather than civilized warfare; and the command was led by forced marches, with little beside the standing corn by the way-side to eat and nothing besides the mud-puddles in the very road to drink, back to the river. Speedy atonement was made for these hardships by the transfer of the regiment to Kentucky, where it was assigned to provost duty at Paris.

In the spring of 1864 the regiment advanced to Cumberland Gap, and expected to participate in the campaign which Sherman conducted to such glorious issues in the heart of Georgia. They were unexpectedly ordered back to Virginia, however, and joined the grand advance upon the rebel capital, under the immediate eye of General Grant. On the 12th of May, 1864, at Spottsylvania Court House, the Ninth New Hampshire led the advance in storming the enemy's works, suffering a loss of more than two hundred in killed wounded and prisoners. Colonel Titus was absent from his regiment on account of sickness and both the Lieut-Colonel and the Major were severely wounded in this engagement.

On the 18th of May, the Ninth was again suddenly and unexpectedly called into action. On the 31st it especially distinguished itself. Advancing alone, and unsupported, it took and held a strong rebel position—so strong that the order for an attack was already countermanded ere the shout of victory rose from its decimated ranks. On the 17th of June, in another brilliant charge at Coal Harbor, the Ninth alone captured, with slight loss, three pieces of artillery and three hundred and seventy-five prisoners. And, to sum up all in a single sentence, in every engagement before Petersburg down to the explosion of the famous mine, the Ninth New Hampshire rendered distinguished service and won unfading laurels.

ELEVENTH INFANTRY.

The Eleventh Regiment was organized at Concord, and mustered into the service September 1, 1862. It left Concord for the front September 11, 1862, arrived at Washington September 14, and marched to Arlington Heights, September 16. October 6, having gone to a point in Maryland opposite Harper's Ferry, the regiment was brigaded with the Twenty-first and Thirty-fifth Massachusetts, the Fifty-first New York and the Fifty-first Pennsylvania, forming a part of the Grand Army of the Potomac, under command of General McClellan. On the 27th of October, this army commenced the march down east of the Blue Ridge for Richmond. It was a long and weary march, especially to troops like the New Hampshire Eleventh, who had then seen but little of the hardship which a soldier can learn to endure. November 19, the regiment reached the Rappahannock River and went into camp near Falmouth, which is opposte to Fredericksburg. On the 13th of December, 1862, the regiment was engaged the entire afternoon in the battle of Fredericksburg. It was in the hottest of the fight and its gallant conduct won the approbation of the Commanding General of the Brigade. Its loss in this battle in killed and wounded, was two hundred and one.

In February, 1863, the Ninth Army Corps, of which the Eleventh Regiment formed a part, went to Newport News, Va., near the mouth of the James River. March 26, the Eleventh Regiment and two divisions of the Ninth Corps, broke camp at Newport News, sailed to Baltimore and thence went by rail to Cincinnati, and down into central Kentucky. After moving about from one exposed point to another in this region for several months, on the 5d day of June, we commenced our great journey to Vicksburg, Miss. Sunday morning, June 14, the regiment arrived at Sherman's Landing, on the Louisiana side of the Mississippi and three miles above Vicksburg. The regiment was engaged in the defences around Vicksburg until its fall, which occurred July 4, 1863. It was also engaged, acting a prominent part in the capture of Jackson, Miss. After this it returned to Kentucky and performed a march from central Kentucky of two hundred miles over the almost trackless mountains of that country, to Knoxville, Tenn. It was engaged in the siege of Knoxville, and it bore itself gallantly through all that trying period. It pursued Longstreet some fifty miles east of Knoxville and till it was found that Longstreet had left East Tennessee to join Lee in Virginia.

March 19, 1864, the said two divisions of the Ninth Corps, (including the Eleventh New Hampshire Regiment,) left Morristown, East Tennessee, to rejoin the Army of the Potomac. Marched two hundred and forty miles to Nicholssonville Kentucky, and thence went by Railroad, via. Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and Baltimore, to Annapolis, Md. Here the Ninth Corps was reorganized and largely increased. We arrived at Annapolis April 7, 1864, remained there till April 23, when we moved forward to constitute a fraction of the Grand Army of General Grant, which was again to move on Richmond.

The regiment crossed the Rapidan, at Germania Ford, the evening of May 5, 1864. No pitching of tents and no rest that night. At 2 o'clock, the next morning the army was in motion, and at day-ligh the bloody battle of the Wilderness had commenced. The Eleventh Regiment was engaged through the entire day. In the afternoon it charged the enemy's lines with great spirit—meeting the rebels hand to hand and for a time carrying everything before it; but a fresh arrival of rebel troops and a fierce and bloody charge from them, forced the Eleventh back in disorder. In this severe engagement the loss of the regiment was heavy, including Lieutenant Colonel Collins, killed, and Colonel Harriman, taken prisoner.

The regiment was hotly engaged May 12, in the battle of Spottsylvania, and its loss was again heavy. It was also engaged at North Anna. at Polopotomy Creek, at Coal Harbor and Bethesda Church. It was engaged in front of Petersburg on the 16th and 17th of June, and at the explosion of the mine on the 30th of July, it suffered severely. In August and September, it was engaged in the battles near the Weldon Railroad, Poplar Grove Church and the Pegram Farm.

The regiment has seen a large amount of hard service and has borne itself gallantly in the face of the enemy and in every place of danger. There has been inscribed on its Banner, by order from the War Department, for meritorious conduct in battle,—"Fredericksburg, Vicksburg, Jackson, East Tennessee, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Coal Harbor, Weldon Railroad, Poplar Grove Church, Hatcher's Run, Petersburg."

TWELFTH INFANTRY.

HEAD QUARTERS 12TH N. H. VOLS.,
2D BRIGADE, 3D DIVISION, 24TH CORPS,
ARMY OF THE JAMES, December 20th, 1864.

On the 10th day of August, 1862, the Governor of New Hampshire gave permission and issued recruiting papers to raise and officer a regiment in Belknap and Carroll Counties, provided it could be done in ten days.

On the 16th, the Adjutant General of the State was notified that ten full companies had been organized and were ready to be mustered into the United States service, which was done respectively as follows:

Co. A, August 30th; Co. B, August 30th; Co. C, September 5th; Co. D, September 5th; Co. E, September 5th; Co. F, September 5th; (Co. F, raised in Merrimack County;) Co. G, September 9th; Co. H, September 9th; Co. I, September 9th; Co. K, September 10th.

Joseph H. Potter, an officer of the regular army with the rank of Captain, was appointed Colonel; John F. Marsh, Captain of volunteers, Lieutenant Colonel; and George D. Savage, Major.

The regiment being the twelfth in order, was so designated, and was encamped for drill at Concord, New Hampshire. It was mustered as a regiment on the 26th day of September, 1862, and left Concord for Washington, D. C., on the 27th. It arrived at Camp Chase, September 30th, and joined Col. Wright's Division of Gen. Casey's Command of the Reserve Army Corps, Defences of Washington, per S. O., No. 188, dated Head Quarters, Casey's Division, Reserve Army Corps, Oct. 1st, 1862.

On the 5th of October, Col. Potter was ordered to report to Gen. Whipple's Division, 3d Army Corps, at Fort Corcoran, Va., per S. O., No. 196, dated Head Quarters Provisional Brigade, Washington, Oct. 5th, 1862.

On the 17th of October the command marched to Washington and was transported by railroad to Knoxville, Md., to join Gen. McClellan's forces, and remained in the vicinity of that place until Oct. 22d, when Whipple's Division was assigned to the Twelfth Army Corps, per S. O., No. 293, dated Head Quarters, Army of the Potomac, Oct. 22d, 1862.

On the 28th, it moved to Berlin, Md., and on the 30th, crossed the Potomac River and marched via Hillsboro, Snickersville, Bloomfield, Peidmont, Orleans, Waterloo and Warrenton, when the division was assigned to the 3d Corps and continued the march to Potomac Creek, near Falmouth, Va., where it arrived Nov. 23d, distance of eighty-five miles from Berlin. The regiment here encamped and remained until Dec. 11th, when it moved in light marching order to near Fredericksburg and bivouacked for the night. On the 12th, while attempting to cross the Rappahannock River, the column was shelled by the enemy, severely wounding two commissioned officers, and five enlisted men. During the engagements on the 13th, and 14th, the regiment was in position for the support of batteries.

On the night of the 15th, eight companies of the regiment were moved to the right of the town while the remaining two companies (C, and F,) were posted on picket near the enemy's lines, and having been neglected to be withdrawn by the officer in command of the picket line, after the retreat of the army across the river, would necessarily have been captured by the enemy, had not Lieut. Col. Marsh risked the attempt to take them off the field, which was successfully done after daylight and were among the last to recross the river. The regiment then returned to its former camp and remained until Jan. 20th, when it again broke camp and moved to near the Rappahannock River, when on account of the roads becoming impassable, caused by a severe rain storm, it remained until the 23d, when it moved back with the whole army to camp. The move was known as the "mud march" and although no men were lost by the bullet, the loss by permanent disability and death caused by exposure and hardship nearly equals the loss which the regiment has sustained at any one engagement in battle since.

The regiment was engaged during the Winter by picketing the front and by drill. On the 30th of April, it moved by a circuitous route and crossed the Rappahannock River at United States Ford. On the 2d, 3d, 4th and 5th, was engaged in the battle of Chancellorsville.

On the morning of the 3d of May, the brigade formed in line of battle at the foot of the hill Chancellor House and at right angles with the Plank Road. In obedience to orders, the regiment advanced under fire into the woods and fought at least an hour with a degree of bravery and steadiness seldom equalled until outnumbered and overpowered by the enemy. The few who remained alive and unharmed made their escape by retreat, which they did only in time to save the capture of the entire regiment. The Colonel was shot through the leg and taken prisoner. The Lieutenant Colonel and Major were severely wounded, but escaped capture. The regiment went into the fight with twenty-eight commissioned officers, and five hundred and forty-nine enlisted men, and lost as follows: three commissioned officers killed; fifteen commissioned officers wounded; forty-two enlisted men killed; two hundred and twelve enlisted men wounded; fifty-one enlisted men taken prisoners; three enlisted men missing; aggregate loss three hundred and eight.

After the battle and the retreat of Gen. Hooker and his army, the regiment returned to the camp it had occupied the previous Winter, where it remained until June 11th, 1863, when it broke camp for the pursuit of the rebel army on its raid into Pennsylvania. The necessity of rapid movements at a season of the year when the weather was extremely warm, made the march out of Virginia across the State of Maryland and to Gettysburg, Pa., one of the most tedious and fatiguing of any ever performed by an army of men. The regiment arrived at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1st, 1863, extremely exhausted and worn out, and without rations. Early on the morning of the 2d, the fight commenced. The regiment under command of Capt. John F. Langley, was engaged during that and the next day, and suffered severely. The number engaged was as follows: twelve commissioned officers; two hundred and twenty-two enlisted men; and lost one commissioned officer killed; and twenty enlisted men; five commissioned officers wounded; sixty-eight enlisted men wounded; aggregate loss ninety-four. The rebel army having been routed and driven at all points, the pursuit again commenced, and a long march ensued. The men, tired and weary and worn, performed the duties with honor and credit to themselves and the State.

At Front Royal the enemy made a stand and a slight engagement ensued, in which the enemy were driven with no loss to the regiment. The troops still moved on, and when at Warrenton, the regiment was ordered to report to Gen. Marston, at Point Lookout, Md., per S. O., No. — dated Head Quarters 3d Army Corps, July 26th, 1863. It arrived at that place July 31st, 1863, and guarded prisoners of war until April 11th, 1864. During the time three hundred and fifty recruits were received. The regiment was then ordered to report to Yorktown, where it arrived April 12th, and was stationed near Williamsburg, Va.

It joined the fleet on the James River May 4th, and landed at Bermuda Hundred, May 6th, 1864. It was engaged in the operations about that place, and on the 9th of May, was engaged at the battle of Swift Creek, Va. The loss was, two enlisted men wounded.

During the advance on Drury's Bluff, the regiment was in the front line of battle for four days without once being relieved. The casualties during the time were two enlisted men killed, and thirty-two wounded. An incident worthy of notice, is the gallant manner in which E. E. Bedee, Captain of Co. G, and J. W. Saunders, First Lieutenant of Co. C, with their companies, worked the guns of batteries stationed on the left of the regiment, which had been deserted by the officers and men.

The forces having fallen back, the regiment was encamped near Bermuda Hundred and was engaged in building the defences of that place.

In a skirmish at Port Walthall, May 26th, two men were mortally wounded.

On the 29th, it embarked on transports at City Point, and on the 31st, disembarked at Whitehouse Landing, Va. Was engaged in the battle of Cold Harbor June 3d, 1864, in which two commissioned officers were killed, and six wounded; thirty-eight enlisted men killed, and one hundred and nineteen wounded. Capt. N. Shackford (since promoted to Major,) here received his sixth wound, by a shell, breaking the left arm and cutting a deep wound across the back. Major S. had before been wounded on the head, had a buck-shot in the wrist, which still remains, a bullet shot through the thigh, and a wound by a bullet, entering the shoulder and lodging near the lung, which was not extracted until eight months after. Major Shackford is now, Dec. 20th, on duty with his regiment.

For twelve days the men of the regiment were in the trenches, and each night were at work on the defences.

On the 12th, the regiment went on board transports, and on the 15th, disembarked at Bermuda Hundred, Va., and the same night marched to the front of Petersburg and the next day moved on the works. For seventy-two days following, the regiment was not relieved from the trenches except to take part in the battle at Cemetery Hill, at the explosion of the mine, July 30th, 1864.

On the 26th of August, the regiment was relieved from the front of Petersburg and moved to the defences of Bermuda Hundred and joined Col. Potter's Reserve Brigade. During this time the casualties were as follows: three commissioned officers wounded; two enlisted men killed; twenty-nine enlisted men wounded.

Col. Potter, who had been wounded and taken prisoner at Chancellorsville, May 3d, 1863, was exchanged per G. O., No. 339, dated War Department, A. G. O., Washington, D. C., Oct. 16th, 1863. He having not yet recovered from his wound was ordered on light duty in Washington, per S. O., No. 434, dated War Department, A. G. O., Washington, Sept. 28th, 1863. Feb. 15th, he was ordered on detached service as Provost Marshal General and Superintendent of Recruiting Service for the State of Ohio, per S. O., No. 74, dated War Department, A. G. O., Washington, D. C., Feb. 15th, 1864, where he remained until Sept. 2d, 1864, at which time he rejoined his regiment, per S. O., No. 290, dated War Department, A. G. O., Washington, D. C., Sept. 2d, 1864, and was assigned to the command of the Second Brigade Second Division, Eighteenth Army Corps, per S. O., No. 109, dated Head Quarters, Second Division, Eighteenth Army Corps, Sept. 15th, 1864. Soon after, he was assigned to the command of the Provisional Brigade, per S. O., No. — dated Head Quarters, Eighteenth Army Corps, 1864.

On the 1st day of October, the regiment was detached and ordered to the north side of the James River, to strengthen the forces about Ft. Harrison; but on the 13th, was returned to the Reserve Brigad e

On the night of the 17th of November, the picket line was attacked. In the engagement one commissioned officer was wounded and two captured; one enlisted man was killed, six wounded and thirty-five captured; two of whom Sergt. A. W. Batchelder and Private Benjamin B. Thompson, escaped from Libby Prison on the night of the 7th of December, and after eight days, made their way into our lines and joined the regiment on the 17th.

On the 4th of Dec., Col. Potter with his command was ordered to the north of the James River, and in the reorganizing of the Tenth and Eighteenth Corps was assigned to the command of the Second Brigade, Third Division Twenty-fourth Army Corps, Army of the James, in which command the regiment still remains.

Since the organization of the regiment it has lost in battle as follows: six commissioned officers killed, and thirty-two wounded; one hundred and five enlisted men killed, and six hundred and seventy-three enlisted men wounded; eighty-six enlisted men captured; three enlisted men missing, probably killed. Of those wounded, three commissioned officers have died of wounds, and twelve have been discharged on account of wounds; one hundred enlisted men have died of wounds, and one hundred and four have been discharged on account of wounds.

Among those died of wounds was the lamented Chaplain, T. L. Ambrose.

During an active campaign of eight months, the regiment has been commanded by LIEUTENANT COLONEL THOMAS E. BARKER.

HISTORY OF THE FIRST COLORS OF THE TWELFTH NEW HAMPSHIRE REGIMENT.

The Twelfth New Hampshire Regiment having been organized and made ready for the field, was presented, through Col. Potter, with a national color and regimental standard, by Gov. Berry, with an appropriate speech, Sept. 25, 1862.

The national colors were carried from the State by Sergt. J. M. Tasker, Co. B, and the regimental standard by Sergt. M. D. L. McDuffee, Co. K. These two color-bearers bore the banners of the regiment through all its marches, through the battle of Fredericksburg, Va., and to the battle of Chancellorsville, where, on the 3d of May, 1863, both were wounded and carried from the field. Both were permanently disabled, and have since been discharged from the service. The national color was then carried by Sergeant Luther Parker, Co. D, and the regimental standard by Sergt. W. J. Howe, Co. E, and was by them carried to Gettysburg; and at the battle, July 2, at that place, in the early part of the fight, Sergt. Howe was killed instantly, and Sergt. Parker fell by his side, shot through the leg, of which he died a few days after. As he fell, he raised up the color and cried out, "I am shot, take the colors." As most of the color-guard had been either killed or wounded, both colors were taken and carried for awhile by Lieut. A. M. Heath, Acting Adjutant. The regiment having been driven for a short distance, halted and reformed its line, under a heavy fire, when Corporal E. L. Shepard and Private G. E. Worthen, of Co. E, voluntarily took them, and when the brigade was ordered forward, led the advance, at which time the enemy were driven at all points. Corporal Shepard and Private Worthen carried the colors through the fight the next day, and also at the battle of Front Royal, July 19, 1863. They have both since been promoted to 1st Lieutenants for their gallantry. The regiment was ordered to Point Lookout, Md., when the colors were sent to the Adjutant General's office for preservation.

At the battle of Gettysburg, when Sergt. Howe was killed, he fell upon his color, and when it was taken up a piece was torn off. Private A. W. Batchelder, Co. E, seeing this, stopped under a heavy fire and succeeded in getting the piece of color and brought it safely away.

I am sir, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
THOMAS E. BARKER,
Lt. Col. 12th N. H. Vol. Com. Reg.

To NATT HEAD, Adjt. Gen. State of N. H.

HEADQUARTERS 12TH N. H. VOLS.,
Prov. Brigade, Prov. Division, Army of the James,
Defences of Berm. Hundred, Va., Nov. 4, 1864.

To the Adjutant General of New Hampshire.

SIR:—I take pleasure in forwarding to you the national colors which have been the banner of the 12th New Hampshire Volunteers for the year past, to be preserved in the archives of the State, as recommended by the Inspector General and ordered by Gen. Butler. A standard that has been so gallantly borne and so bravely defended is worthy of as proud a position as is in your power to give it. Their tattered folds speak volumes to the heroic few who still remain to tell the sad story of those who have fallen in their defence. Ages hence, when treason and rebellion at home and abroad shall be known only among the things that were, when the stalwart men who are now defending their country's rights and honor, shall become bowed with age and their heads silvered with the frost of time, then will they look upon the stars and stripes under which they have fought and conquered, with an honest pride, and bless those who have so wisely prepared a place for their preservation.

This stand of colors have been in possession of the regiment since Sept. 1, 1863, and have been carried during the present campaign in the following named battles: Swift Creek, Va., May 9th and 10th, 1864; Drury's Bluff, Va., May 16th, 1864; Cold Harbor, Va., June 3d to 12th, 1864; Petersburg, Va., June 15th, 1864; Cemetery Hill, Va., July 30, 1864.

Honorable mention should be made of Sergeant Hoyt, of Co. G, who so gallantly carried the colors at Cold Harbor and brought them from the field amid a shower of bullets, even after he was severely wounded. Sergeant Wallace, of Co. H, also is deserving of much credit for the brave and commendable manner in which he has since borne them.

We transfer them now to the care of the State, hoping they will be carefully preserved until we have fought a few more battles and made peaceful citizens of traitors and rebels. When peace shall be restored, the Union reëstablished, and our glorious banner shall waive proudly over the whole and united country, then we will return to the quiet walks of life and resume our peaceful avocations.

I am, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
THOMAS E. BARKER,
Lieutenant Colonel 12th N. H. Vols., Com. Reg.

THIRTEENTH INFANTRY.

This Regiment was organized for three years service, in the Fall of 1862, under the call of the President for six hundred thousand troops. The call was responded to with great promptness in this State and our regiments were filled with the best materials from the true hearted yeomanry and mechanics of New Hampshire. The rank and file of the Thirteenth had its full representation of hardy, intelligent and patriotic men of these classes, almost entirely citizens of our own State; men well adapted from their character, intelligence and habits of life, to fully appreciate the great struggle on which they were actively entering, and to feel the sacrifices they were called upon to make.

In its organization of ten companies, seven counties were represented: Rockingham, Hillsborough and Strafford each furnishing two, and Merrimack, Grafton, Carroll and Coos, one each. The first company went into camp at Concord on the 11th of September, and so rapidly was the regiment filled and organized that on Sunday, the 5th of October, in the presence of a large assembly, it received its colors at the State House, from the hand of Hon. Allen Tenny, Secretary of State, and on the following day left the State for Washington, completely equipped and armed. Its companies were mustered on the 18th, 19th and 20th of September, and its field officers on the 23d of the same month.

On its arrival in Washington the regiment was placed in the provisional command of Gen. Casey and encamped on the south side of the Potomac near Fort Albany. From this place it moved to Fairfax Seminary. Here it remained under instruction for a short time and was then placed on outpost and picket duty in front of the defences of Washington until the first day of December, when it moved to join the Army of the Potomac near Fredericksburg. A toilsome and exposed march of ten days through Maryland to Aquia Creek, and thence to Falmouth, followed, and on the 10th, three days before the battle of Fredericksburg, the regiment was merged in the magnificent army with which Burnside confronted the rebel forces of Lee, enveloping the city on the south and west. It was assigned to the First Brigade, Third Division, (Gen. Getty,) of the Ninth Army Corps, then commanded by Gen. Wilcox, crossed the Rappahannock with its division the next day and bivouacked in the streets of the city, throwing out two companies as skirmishers in the vicinity of Hazel Run.

BATTLE OF FREDERICKSBURG.

On the 13th, occurred the disastrous battle of Fredericksburg, in which the number and valor of our troops failed to dislodge the enemy from his impregnable position on the heights commanding the city. To that portion of our troops with which the Thirteenth was associated, was assigned the desperate and bloody duty of attempting to carry the most formidable position in the enemy's line—the batteries on "Marye's Heights." The blood of New Hampshire's sons was gallantly and bravely shed that day in repeated but futile efforts to break the enemy's line at that point—and her gallant dead were buried within forty yards of the guns of the rebel Col. Walton, which on that disastrous day lowered in a fiery and deadly semicircle along the brow of "Marye's Hill." About sunset the Thirteenth charged with the division into this vortex of death, moving forward in line of battle. The command shared the fate of the other brave troops who had previously assaulted the position, and was repulsed and broken by the murderous fire of the enemy's riflemen. The lines of the Thirteenth and Tenth New Hampshire were however immediately reformed by their commanders, with the intention of renewing the charge, but the entire command was soon ordered to retire to the city. The battle was not renewed and on the night of the 15th, the city was evacuated by our troops, who recrossed the river to their old encampments. During the evacuation and while the remainder of the division retired across the river, the Thirteenth held out picket line along the railroad and on both sides of Hazel Run. Lively firing was kept up during the night with the pickets of the enemy. It was a position of responsibility and peril, and was held by the regiment until about three o'clock on the morning of the 16th, when it was relieved and again joined the brigade.

In this battle the regiment lost three officers and thirty-nine men, killed, wounded and prisoners. Capt. Carter, and Lieuts. Durell and Shaw, were slightly wounded. It was its first and unfortunate experience in the stern realities of war, and though dispiriting in results, proved the fortitude and bravery of officers and men.

Few persons connected with the army will forget the gloom and despondency that followed the disaster at Fredericksburg. The regiment shared with the army the cold and snow, the mud and exposure of Falmouth; suffering severely from sickness of officers and men, until the February following, when it moved with the Ninth Army Corps to Newport News. From this place it went on the 13th of March, with the division to Suffolk, where it was actively engaged in the defence of that place against the siege that soon followed. For four weeks it held a position in our line of defence along the Nansemond, confronting the enemy and holding him at bay, erecting defensive works and being under fire most of the time.

ACTION AT SUFFOLK.

On the 3d of May, a reconnoissance was ordered and four regiments, including the Thirteenth with some Artillery and Cavalry, crossed the Nansemond on the Providence Church Road and in their advance drove in the skirmishers of the enemy, who retired to their rifle-pits in the edge of the woods, where they occupied a line more than half a mile in length. Upon this line the Thirteenth with a part of the Eighty-ninth New York charged under the command of Col. Stevens of the Thirteenth, and carried the works at the point of the bayonet; the killed and wounded of the enemy falling into our hands. The enemy were driven through the woods and a strong line of their entrenchments heavily garrisoned, was unmasked. His position and strength having been developed by this movement, our artillery opened a sharp fire upon his works which was briskly replied to, the fight lasting until dark. The same night the enemy withdrew from his position, raised the siege of Suffolk, and retreated towards the Blackwater, closely pursued by our troops, who captured a large number of prisoners.

For their conduct in this affair the Thirteenth was particularly complimented. Their loss in killed and wounded was about thirty. Capt. Buzzell was killed, and Lieut. Murray severely, and Capt. Stoodley slightly wounded.

Suffolk was soon after abandoned by our troops—our line of defense retired to the vicinity of Portsmouth, and a new line six miles in length, with military roads, &c., constructed; the regiment doing an immense amount of labor upon these new fortifications. In this work and in the continuous picket duty which it shared with the command, the regiment was engaged during the Summer and Fall. It however participated in the toilsome and severe march of the expedition of Gen. Dix to Hanover Junction in June, and to the exposure and hardships of that march, in connection with its hard and constant labor on the fortifications, may, probably, we think, be attributed the extraordinary sickness and mortality in the regiment, which succeeded its return to camp. Two companies, B and D, were soon after placed in Fort Tillinghast, in the line of defences, where they were instructed and exercised in Heavy Artillery, and where they remained until the following Winter. These positions were occupied by the regiment until the opening of the Spring campaign—completing and holding the works on the line—sharing in the constant picket duty—participating in several expeditions of the command, and finding little leisure even in Winter. During the Fall and Winter the regiment received two hundred and forty recruits and substitutes.

CAMPAIGN OF 1864.

For the campaign of 1864, the regiment was organized with the Second Brigade and First Division of the Eighteenth Army Corps. The brigade was composed of the Tenth and Thirteenth New Hampshire, Eighth Connecticut and One Hundred and Eighteenth New York Volunteers, and placed under the command of Brig. Gen. Hiram Burnham, formerly Colonel of the Sixth Maine. These regiments served and fought together under his command, in the attack on the Walthal Railroad, on the 7th of May, at Swift Creek near Petersburg, at Kingsland Creek, Drury's Bluff, Coal Harbor, and at Petersburg; until the 25th of July, when the Thirteenth was transferred to the First Brigade of the same division. The corps was commanded by Maj. Gen. William F. Smith, and the division by Brig. Gen. Brooks.

It will be remembered that the Eighteenth Corps was organized at Yorktown the last of April. Of this corps it has recently been well and justly said, that it "has never retreated beaten, from any of its hard fought battle fields. From the time when under Baldy Smith with a marvelous secrecy and dispatch, it moved from Yorktown up the James and reëstablished permanently the Union Flag within cannon sound of the Rebel Capital, through its desperate and glorious charges at Coal Harbor, its successful onslaught at Petersburg, and its equally successful advance under Gen. Ord to Chaffin's Bluff, almost under the walls of Richmond, it has preserved with unvarying consistency the character for unsurpassed gallantry won at the commencement of this campaign of many battles." The corps moved up the James, landed at Bermuda Hundred, and on the 7th of May, the Thirteenth was engaged with the enemy on the Walthal Branch Road, and on the 9th and 10th, fought them at Swift Creek, driving them across the Creek to their entrenchments near the city of Petersburg, and losing in these operations several men killed and wounded.

On the 12th of May, it again moved from camp, met the enemy on the Richmond and Petersburg Turnpike, drove them towards Richmond, the regiment capturing several prisoners; and on the 13th and 14th, followed them up, driving them across Kingsland Creek and from their rifle-pits and entrenchments, capturing their outer line of works at Drury's Bluff. The regiment during these operations was constantly under fire, a portion of it being night and day on the skirmish line, with the remainder in support.

THE ACTION AT DRURY'S BLUFF.

The position in the captured works assigned to the Thirteenth was on the extreme left of the brigade a little west of the turnpike, the Tenth New Hampshire joining it on the right. This position was held until the morning of the 16th, when it will be recollected, Beauregard with thirty thousand troops, in the dense fog of that morning, attacked Gen. Butler's line and surprised Gen. Heckman's command on our right, forcing it back on our centre. The attack took place about four o'clock, but the Thirteenth and Tenth had been under arms for half an hour previous and were well prepared to receive the enemy. He made a fierce attack on our skirmishers in front of these two regiments and forced them to retire; but they were soon rallied and their line reformed. This they held until the enemy being heavily reënforced from his left, massed his troops directly in front of the Thirteenth, and advanced to the assault of our position in three lines, forcing our skirmishers to retire to the main body. The assault was handsomely repulsed by the Thirteenth, aided by the oblique fire of the Tenth. The enemy made two like attempts to carry the position by assault, but were each time repulsed with heavy loss. Fifty-nine prisoners were taken by the Thirteenth, principally from the Forty-fourth Tennessee and North Carolina Regiments. With them was captured the Adjutant General of Bushrod Johnson. This position was held until about nine, A. M., when peremptory orders were received from the division commander to retire. Probably no order was ever more reluctantly obeyed—the impression of the command being strong that the position could be held in spite of any force the enemy could bring against it. But the right and left of the line had fallen back, nothing was left but to obey orders, and the regiment slowly and sullenly retired in line of battle to the edge of a wood half a mile to the rear, a position which was held until our troops retired to camp that night. Over fifty rounds of ammunition per man had been expended in the regiment that morning at short range, and the muster roll of the Forty-fourth Tennessee afterwards captured at Fort Harrison, showed how faithfully our brave men did their work. The loss of the regiment in killed, wounded and prisoners, during these operations towards Petersburg and Richmond was thirty one. Lieut. R. R. Thompson was wounded severely while on picket duty on the morning of the 16th.

BATTLE OF COAL HARBOR.

From this time until the last of May, the regiment held a position in our lines between the James and Appomattox Rivers, constantly active and at work, assisting in the construction of the defences and performing picket duty. It then moved with the corps to White House Landing, marched from there to Coal Harbor, which it reached on the first of June, and immediately engaged the enemy on the afternoon of that day, advancing under a terrific fire of musketry and artillery, gaining and holding a position in our advance lines, commanding the works of the enemy. In this action the regiment lost heavily; sixty officers and men having fallen in less than five minutes. Col. Stevens and Capt. Goss, were slightly, and Capt. Farr and Lieut. Staniels, severely wounded.

On the 3d of June, the regiment moved to a new position in front of and near the enemy's lines, where it was massed with the division in an attacking column, and placed under the fire of the enemy's guns and musketry. In this position it remained several hours, suffering severely from the enemy's fire. The order to attack was then countermanded, the regiment having lost two officers and eleven men killed and wounded. Lieut. George H. Taggard was severely wounded here, and Lieut. J. M. Durell received a slight wound in the neck.

During the darkness of the succeeding night the regiment was moved to a position in our advanced lines, and at day-break on the morning of the 4th, found itself confronting the enemy's strong works, at short rifle range, with its right wing quite unprotected from the enemy's musketry, which at once opened fire upon the exposed troops. This was remedied by manœuvreing the command, not without loss, under the enemy's fire, and throwing up entrenchments on the right. These works formed our advanced line while our army remained at Coal Harbor, and were held by the First Division during that time.

The regiment took part in the subsequent operations at Coal Harbor, losing considerably in casualties, being constantly on duty at the front, and under the enemy's fire. Capt. George N. Julian was slightly wounded here. The total casualties of the regiment at Coal Harbor, were, officers wounded, six; men killed, fourteen; men wounded and prisoners, sixty-four; total, eighty-four.

The army having moved from Coal Harbor, the Thirteenth was once more encamped on the 14th of June, on its former ground near Bermuda Hundred. But a short rest awaited it there. On the morning of the 15th of June, a portion of our troops crossed the Appomattox for the ATTACK ON PETERSBURG.

This city was surrounded by a cordon of well-constructed and formidable earthworks and fortifications, and the second brigade reached their front about 10, A. M. The prominent part which the 13th took in the important operation of that day will be as well understood from the official reports of the general officers, under whose eye they occurred; and accordingly portions of them are transcribed. Under date of June 17th, General Burnham, commanding the brigade, in his report to General Brooks, who commanded the division, says:

"I encountered the enemy's skirmishers about 10, A. M., posted in the woods directly in front of their line of fortifications. The whole of the Eighth Connecticut Volunteers, Capt. Coit commanding, and the Thirteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, Col. A. F. Stevens, were here deployed as skirmishers. The line moved up promptly and drove the enemy's skirmishers out of the woods back to their rifle pits in front of their stronger fortifications. The skirmishers then moved out into the open ground in advance of the woods, and the left of the line was cautiously advanced by Col. Stevens some two hundred yards when the enemy were engaged, and desultory skirmishing was kept up throughout the day, the enemy at times shelling us severely from battery numbers five, six and seven." After stating that the skirmish line was strengthened by two companies from the One Hundred and Eighteenth New York Volunteers and one hundred and fifty men of the Ninety-second New York Volunteers, General B. proceeds:

"At about 5:30, P. M., I received orders to assault the enemy's fortifications in front of the division with my skirmishers, and at once made all the necessary dispositions for the attack, and moved the Tenth New Hampshire Volunteers, Lieut-Col. J. Coughlin, forward to the edge of the woods to support the movement.—Some time elapsed before the arrival of the artillery, but our guns having got into position and opened a heavy fire on the enemy's works, at a few minutes past seven, I threw my skirmishers forward and assaulted their line, advancing on the double quick under a severe musketry and artillery fire. My line dashed across the open field to the enemy's 'French rifle pits,' which they captured with the entire force that occupied them. Nearly a hundred prisoners were captured here and were hastily sent to the rear, a portion of them guarded by men from the Thirteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, while others were probably driven to the rear without any guard whatever. Col. Stevens then ordered the line forward and still encountering a severe fire they dashed across the open field through the ravine, and up to the enemy's formidable works, assaulting and capturing battery number five in a gallant manner. Captains E. W. Goss, George N. Julian, and N. D. Stoodley, of the Thirteenth New Hampshire, were among the first to enter the battery, and to them the officers commanding it surrendered. Lt. Col. Council of the Twenty-sixth Virginia Regiment, Major Beattie and another Major, name unknown, surrendered their swords to Capt. Julian, while Capt. Sturdivant commanding the field battery, which was captured, surrendered his sword to Capt. Stoodley. The Thirteenth captured in this work one color, five pieces of artillery, and about one hundred prisoners. The number of prisoners captured in the whole affair could not have been less than two hundred.—Throughout these operations the behavior of my entire command was such as entitles it to my commendation and thanks. I desire particularly to bring to your favorable notice Colonel Aaron F. Stevens of the Thirteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, both for his personal gallantry in charging the enemy's works on the 15th, and for the able manner in which he handled his regiment on that occasion. To him and to his regiment the success which was achieved is due in a very great measure, and I take pleasure in recommending him for promotion."

General Brooks, in his report to General Smith commanding the Eighteenth Army Corps, says: "It was determined by General Smith to throw forward this line of skirmishers if possible to the ravine just in front of the enemy's line, from which position it was supposed they might keep down the artillery fire, while the main column would cross the opening in our front. * * * As soon as the artillery was got into position the skirmish line, all under command of Col. Stevens, Thirteenth New Hampshire, was rapidly advanced under the fire of our artillery, and succeeded not only in getting up to the enemy's front, but in gaining the rear of his main batteries, capturing the garrison with guns double shotted, waiting the advance of the main line. * * * I respectfully endorse Brigadier-General Burnham's report of the operations of his brigade. I beg leave to call attention to the officers he commands, and especially to the conduct of Col. A. F. Stevens, Thirteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, who commanded the skirmish line. I concur most cheerfully in General Burnham's recommendations in favor of Col. Stevens' promotion."

As soon as the fort was entered by the Thirteenth, the captured guns were, by order of Col. Stevens, turned and fired upon the retreating enemy. In this brilliant and successful affair, in which the regiment crossed a ravine in front of the enemy's work forty feet below the parapet, the Thirteenth lost heavily; its position in front of battery number five, exposing it at once to the fire of the enemy's skirmishers and their riflemen in the trenches, as well as the heavy fire of grape and spherical case shot from his artillery. This concentrated fire, however, gave but slight check to the impetuosity and heroism of the officers and men of the regiment. It went into action with fifteen officers and one hundred and eighty-nine muskets, and lost in killed and wounded forty-nine. Capt. E. E. Dodge, a brave and efficient officer, fell mortally wounded in the assault, just before reaching the works, and died in hospital seven days after. Adjutant Boutwell and Lieut. Gafney, were dangerously wounded while gallantly pressing forward in the charge, and fell near the works of the enemy. Lieut. S. M. Thompson was severely wounded in the course of the afternoon while upon the skirmish line. Two rebel battle-flags, one taken by Sergeant James K. Morrison of company K., the other by Corporal Peter Mitchell of the same company, were sent as trophies, by Col. Stevens, to the Governor of New Hampshire.

From this time until the 27th of August, the regiment shared in the exposure, hardships, and military operations of the Eighteenth Corps, in the trenches before Petersburg. Scarce a day or night passed in which the regiment was not under fire, and it suffered its share of casualties from this cause. Its position was on the extreme right of our line, resting on the Appomattox, where it was subjected to a reverse fire from the enemy's batteries on the opposite side of the river. On the 25th of July, the regiment was transferred to the first brigade of the division.—The brigade was composed of the Thirteenth New Hampshire, the Eighty-first, Ninety-eighth and One Hundred and Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, and Col. Stevens was assigned to its command. This command was retained by him until the assault on Fort Harrison on the 29th of September—Major, now Lieutenant-Colonel Smith, in the meantime commanding the regiment. The brigade was present at the explosion of the "mine," on the 30th of July, and held the outer position of our works in front of the "crater," about five hundred feet distant from it, for two days after our troops had retired from the assault, when it was relieved and returned to its former position on the right of the line.

Thus passed "in front of Petersburg," nearly three months of a Virginia summer. At last on the 27th of August, the corps was relieved, and the Thirteenth New Hampshire moved with its brigade to a position midway between the James and Appomattox, where it held the exposed, salient, advanced works, and picket line of our defenses, until the 28th of September, constantly engaged in work upon the fortifications and in picket duty.—On that day it was relieved by new regiments of Pennsylvania troops, and again prepared to attack the enemy on the north side of the James. At nine, P. M., of that day, the entire brigade—with the exception of company C, of the Thirteenth, which garrisoned a redoubt of our advanced works, where it has ever since remained—in light marching order, left their camps and moved with its division to the

ASSAULT OF FORT HARRISON.

This was a formidable work in the enemy's line of defences, at Chaffin's Farm, half a mile from the north bank of the James, and about six miles from Richmond, the advance to which was commanded in part by the rebel gunboats in the river above Dutch Gap. Of this work a field officer of the British army, who has recently visited it, says: "It is about six miles and a quarter from Richmond, a strong earthen fort, and so placed that the taking of it is quite unaccountable. It is on a hill with a natural glacis of six or seven hundred yards, and which good gunners should sweep against all comers. Taking into account an extensive abattis, which is constructed by merely felling the trees and pointing them outwards, it should have been toilsome, dangerous work to have traversed that long slope. However, there is the fort in the hands of the Federals, be it attributed to pluck, luck, surprise, treachery, scare, or whatever other explanation." To the first division, commanded by Brigadier-General Stannard of Vermont, was assigned the duty of assaulting and carrying this work. It crossed the James on pontoons near Aiken's Landing on the morning of the 29th, and came upon the enemy's pickets at daylight. The Tenth New Hampshire and One Hundred and Eighteenth New York, under command of Col. Donahoe, were deployed as skirmishers, and armed with Spencer's "seven shooters." Captain Goss, of the Thirteenth, with his sharp shooters, was also in the skirmish line. Skirmishing at once commenced, and while our line drove the enemy rapidly back, the division, massed in column, followed closely in support. An advance of some three miles, in which the firing at times appeared like a general engagement, brought the head of the supporting column in view of Fort Harrison, three fourths of a mile distant. The intervening space over which our column was to move to the assault, was an open and gradually ascending field. The fort at once opened its heavy guns on the head of our column. The skirmishers advanced rapidly across the field, while the assaulting column, with fixed bayonets and muskets uncapped, moved in quick time, steadily and irresistibly upon the enemy's works. Our troops were met in front and flank by a continuous discharge of musketry, and by a sharp and plunging fire of artillery, both from the fort and from gunboats on our left flank. The shot and shell of the enemy tore through our ranks, and their musketry told on our men and officers at every step—but the gaps were instantly closed, the advance was unchecked—officers and men vieing with each other in this march of death, to maintain the firmness and integrity of the column. This splendid advance was witnessed by General Stannard from his position, not without anxiety, but with enthusiastic pride. The ditch was at last reached, and was at once filled with our brave men. Then came the shout, the struggle, the hand to hand fight, and the fort is won. Our colors soon float from the parapet. Among the first there is the torn and ragged banner of the Thirteenth, for it was the third regiment in the column, and led its brigade. Its color guard of six had all fallen in the advance, either killed or wounded, four of them while bearing the colors. A part of the national color of the regiment had been torn off by a shot from the enemy, while still at some distance from the fort, but the sacred relic was seized by Sergeant D. W. Bodge, who bore the color, hastily thrust into his bosom, and when he fell was carried with him from the field to the hospital. But what remains of the glorious old flag is floating from the captured work, and what remain of its brave defenders are mingling their voices in the shout of victory. Lieut-Col. Normand Smith, in his official report of this gallant affair, says:

"We advanced under a heavy fire of musketry into the outer ditch of the fort without firing a shot. Then came the struggle, who should first plant their colors on the fort. The entire color guard of this regiment, six in number, were killed or wounded, four of them with the colors in their hands, and the regiment claim that their colors were first on the fort, which was carried a few minutes after seven." Having been wounded in the ditch outside the fort, the command devolved on Captain Stoodley of company G, who furnishes the following particulars:

"On entering the fort the regiment gathered around the colors, and some were sent to turn the guns, two of which were turned and fired several times on the retreating enemy. About 10 o'clock we joined the other regiments of the brigade, and formed a line of battle in the rear, now front of the fort, posting pickets in advance of our present line, where they remained during the night. Late in the afternoon, we commenced throwing up breast-works on the left of the fort. About an hour afterwards we were moved out of the fort towards the left, and worked all night upon the works now running from the fort to the river."

Twenty-two guns and a large number of prisoners were captured in this assault. The next day the enemy with Field's division of Longstreet's corps, under the supervision of General Lee, made four assaults upon our lines at this point, but was each time repulsed with terrible slaughter. While the enemy were advancing to the assault, the first brigade sang the "Battle Cry of Freedom." In these attacks the Thirteenth received the enemy in open ground, for the works on which they had spent their labor were now occupied by other troops. But they did their full share in the bloody work of the second day. Of their part in the operations of that day, Captain (now Major) Stoodley, then commanding the regiment, in the official report of Lieut-Col. Smith above quoted, says:

"On the morning of the 30th, the regiment was again moved into the fort and placed at work on the left, where we were when it was found the enemy were massing on the right, when we were moved to the extreme right of the fort, our right resting on the entrenchments. About twenty minutes afterwards, the enemy made the attack. The regiment was almost entirely unprotected during the engagement, but never flinched, and kept up a destructive fire upon the advancing enemy, who were repulsed in every attempt to recapture the fort. After the repulse of the enemy, Captain Goss, company I, commanding sharp shooters, captured the colors of three regiments of Clingman's brigade, and several prisoners."

The conduct of the officers and men of the Thirteenth on these two days was superb, but its loss was again severe, more so than in any former engagement; for more than one half of the command which left camp on the night of the 28th, had in these two days melted away under the fire of the enemy, and been borne from the field either killed or wounded. Two officers and thirteen men were killed, and seven officers and fifty-nine men wounded. Captain G. A. Forbush and Lieut. R. R. Thompson, brave and meritorious officers, were killed in the assault. Their memory is dear to the regiment. Col. Stevens fell severely wounded in the assault, while moving at the head of his regiment and brigade, and when within a few yards of the fort, where he lay until our colors were planted upon the parapet, and was then carried from the field. Besides the officers named, Lieut-Col. Smith, Captains Saunders and Bruce and Lieutenants Hall, Ladd and Wheeler were wounded; Lieutenant Ladd very severely. General Ord, commanding the corps, was severely wounded, and General Stannard lost his right arm.

Since these operations the regiment has remained on duty in the vicinity of Fort Harrison, now called Fort Burnham, in honor of the brave and veteran soldier, Brig. Gen. Burnham, who nobly fell in the assault and capture of the work. It took part in the movement against the enemy's left on the Williamsburg Road, Oct. 27th, though it did not take part in the assault. Capt. E. W. Goss, of Co. I, commanding the sharpshooters of the division, and Lieut. H. H. Murray, of Co. E, on the staff of the Second Brigade, both well tried and gallant officers, were captured while assaulting the works of the enemy, and are still in his hands. One man was wounded and five taken prisoners.

In the formation of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps, composed of the white troops of the Tenth and Eighteenth, a change which took place about the 1st of December, the Thirteenth was placed in the First Brigade of the Third Division—the Nineteenth Wisconsin and Eleventh Connecticut, being added to the brigade.

In November 1864, authority was received from the General Commanding the Army, to place upon the national color of the regiment, the names and dates of the fifteen engagements following, in which the regiment has borne an honorable part. And while its old colors, worn with service and torn with hostile shot, will be deposited with the memorials of war in the keeping of our State, new ones bearing these inscriptions of danger and honor, wait their baptism of fire and blood in the same sacred cause:

Coal Harbor, June 1st and 3d, 1864.
Battery 5, Petersburg, June 15th, 1864.
Battery Harrison, September 29th and 30th, 1864.

It is but justice to the regiment to say that no officer of the command has ever been cashiered or dismissed the service; that one-half or more of its officers are kept on detached service in various capacities in the army, while the general intelligence and honesty of its men, have won for the regiment, a character for trustworthiness, efficiency and integrity in the discharge of their duties, second to none in the service. It has captured five pieces of artillery in one charge, and with its division taken sixteen pieces more, has captured three battle flags; and taken more prisoners from the enemy than the number in its own ranks; and has never been driven from the field, or from its positions by the enemy.

This comparatively brief history, consisting principally of a short resume of the prominent actions in which the regiment has participated, gives after all, but a faint and imperfect conception of the individual endurance, courage and gallantry of officers and men, which constitute the corps de esprit of a command, and render its efforts prompt, effective and successful. And so likewise the limits prescribed to this sketch, forbid the mention of a thousand incidents in the career of the regiment, which adorn and enoble the life and service of the private soldier, and with which no command is more replete than the "Thirteenth." But the acts and the memories of its gallant men, are appreciated and cherished by their officers, and we trust its laurels, won on hard fought and bloody fields, will be a source of satisfaction and pride, as well to the thousands of men and women of New Hampshire, who are bound to its members by ties of blood and affection, as to all who watch the progress of our arms with sentiments of loyalty and patriotism.

January, 1865.

FOURTEENTH INFANTRY.

[The following history was kindly furnished by William Henry Thayer, Surgeon Fourteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.]

The Summer of 1862, saw the nation under a heavy cloud. The disastrous campaign on the peninsula brought the people to the verge of despair; but that verge was never passed. The President called for five hundred thousand volunteers; bounties were offered to stimulate volunteering—bounties very moderate in comparison with all that have been offered since; the call was everywhere promptly answered; the people again sprang to arms.

In New Hampshire, recruits came in from every county, and the month of September found Concord over-run with the soldiers of five regiments gathering for the army of the United States; another regiment had gone to the front, and two were in camp at Manchester. They were from the Ninth to the Sixteenth inclusive.

The Fourteenth Regiment was recruited mostly in the southwestern part of the State; four companies in Cheshire County, and in Sullivan, Grafton, Coös, Carroll, Merrimack and Hillsborough, one each. It was mustered into the service of the United States in Concord, on the 24th of September, 1862; was quartered in barracks on the Fair Ground, near the Twelfth and Thirteenth Regiments, and left Concord for Washington in the latter part of October.

The Virginia campaign was at an end. The Ninth Regiment went out just in season to be hurried to Antietam, where its raw recruits behaved like veterans. The Fourteenth arrived in Washington when no further force was required in the Army of the Potomac or at Fortress Monroe, and was ordered to report to Gen. Grover, who commanded a brigade then doing picket duty along the Potomac from the defences of Washington to the mouth of the Monocacy. Gen. Grover was soon ordered to report to Gen. Banks, then assembling a force for the Department of the Gulf; and the brigade was then commanded by the senior Colonel, P. S. Davis, of the Thirty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers. The brigade consisted of the Thirty-ninth Massachusetts, Fourteenth New Hampshire, Tenth Vermont and Twenty-third Maine, Infantry, the Tenth Massachusetts Battery, and two squadrons of Cavalry.

The Winter was spent by the brigade in the arduous duty of picketing the river, for an extent of forty miles. The brigade was divided into several camps. The Fourteenth Regiment at first encamped at Lock 21, Chesapeake and Ohio Canal; late in November it moved several miles towards Rockville, and went into camp with the Thirty ninth Massachusetts December 21st, moved camp to Poolsville, with the Thirty-ninth Massachusetts, the Battery and Cavalry; the Twenty-third Maine being at Edward's Ferry, and the Tenth Vermont at Conrad's Ferry and the mouth of the Monocacy. Large details were daily made for picket duty, at first along the river, and after the removal to Poolsville at a line of inland posts from half-a-mile to two miles from camp.

In the latter part of April, 1863, the regiment marched to Washington, whither the Thirty-ninth Massachusetts had lately preceded it, and went into camp on the north-east side of the city, at the end of New York Avenue. From that time until February, 1864, the regiment did provost duty in Washington, remaining at the same camp in Gale's woods. The nature of this duty was various. It carried important responsibilities with it; and the regiment had the satisfaction, when it left the city, of feeling that it left behind a good reputation and its departure was much regretted by the people generally, as well as by the heads of the several departments with which it has been connected.

The regiment furnished the guards for the old Capitol Prison and Central Guard House, and a number of men for about ten other posts in the city. One company was detached and on duty at Sixth Street Wharf, the principal landing for steamboats and other vessels from the South. The chief duty of this detachment was the suppression of contraband trade and the arrest of unauthorized travellers. At one time during the Summer the Military Governor ordered the examination of all passengers from the city in every direction, with a view to stopping the conveyance of supplies or goods contraband of war from Washington by way of Maryland into Virginia. To this end, guards were posted on all the avenues leading to the city, and seventeen of these posts were maintained by the Fourteenth Regiment. This duty being in addition to the regular details for the prisons, it exhausted the whole force of the regiment: at every bridge, wharf, landing, and on every road leading from Washington, a squad of men was posted, with orders to stop every one carrying any kind of goods, without a pass from the Provost Marshal. The consternation of the disloyal may well be imagined; the order produced extensive confiscations for some days, and produced the desired effect of stopping the flood of goods intended to give aid and comfort to the enemy. For this, as well as many other energetic measures of the Military Government of Washington, much credit is due to Major Sherburne, A. A. G., and Chief of Staff to the Military Governor, (afterwards Col. Sherburne, Eleventh New York Cavalry, and Provost Marshal General, Department of the Gulf,) — who was untiring in his devotion to duty, and under whose services the Government of Washington became very efficient.

Duty in the city was sometimes diversified by expeditions to guard parties of prisoners to different military prisons, or parties of recruits to the front. The regiment was sent with twelve hundred prisoners to Fort Delaware; one detachment went at another time to Sandusky, on Lake Erie, with a number of rebel officers, several times parties were sent on the same business to Fort Lafayette, Point Lookout and Fortress Monroe, and several to Warrenton, Va., the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac at that time. Once the regiment was marched to Fort Stevens in the defences of Washington, upon a sudden alarm, created by Stuart's crossing the Potomac with his Cavalry — and again a battalion of two companies was sent to Campbell Hospital to quell a mutiny in the Invalid Corps composing the hospital guard. Thus they were kept perpetually busy.

During the Winter of 1863 and 1864, a squad of men were detailed to build barracks for the regiment in Seventh Street.

Before they were completed, the regiment was ordered—at the beginning of February—to Harper's Ferry. They went by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and on arriving at Harper's Ferry, were ordered to Cumberland, eighty miles further west. They returned soon to Harper's Ferry, and were on duty there, sending scouting parties twenty miles up the Shenandoah Valley, until the latter part of the month, when orders were received to proceed to Washington; arrived there on the 25th of the month, and went into the Seventh Street barracks.

But they were not destined to occupy them long. February 27th, the regiment received orders to take transportation at New York or Boston for the Department of the Gulf, with permission to visit New Hampshire before sailing. They left New York, seven companies under Col. Wilson, in the Daniel Webster, March 20th, and three companies under Major Gardiner, in the Liberty, March 29th, for New Orleans. The Daniel Webster had a long, rough passage of twenty-three days, having put into Hilton Head for repairs after being disabled by heavy gales, and into Key West for coal. She arrived in New Orleans April 12th, and the regiment was at once ordered to Camp Parapet, seven miles west of New Orleans, and landed there. Major Gardiner's detachment had a quick passage, arriving in New Orleans April 6th, and were on provost duty at Carrollton, between the city and Camp Parapet, when the Daniel Webster arrived.

Camp Parapet is at the point where the western fortifications of New Orleans reach the Mississippi. A line of earthworks stretches from the river to the swamp which borders on Lake Pontchartrain. It forms a post within the District of Carrollton. This military district includes the territory between the river and the lake, west of New Orleans and extending up the river sixty miles. Colonel Wilson was appointed to the command of the District of Carrollton as senior officer, and Major Gardiner was subsequently put in command of the post at Camp Parapet —Lieut. Col. Barker being in Washington on detached duty. Along the river and on the lake were several detached posts, chiefly for defence against the guerilla hordes that infested the country. The District of Carrollton is within the "defences of New Orleans," of which Major Gen. Reynolds was commander.

The Fourteenth Regiment did miscellaneous duty at Camp Parapet, Carrollton, Jefferson City, and along the lake as far as Pass Manchac. Carrollton had a camp of instruction for cavalry, and Camp Parapet had two or three regiments of infantry and heavy artillery for duty at the fortifications, and picket duty along the lake and at Pass Manchac. The Fourteenth Regiment furnished a large daily detail for labor on the fortifications, the commander of the post being ordered to repair them. We remained at Camp Parapet till June 6th. Happily for the regiment we reached the Department of the Gulf just too late to take part in the disastrous expedition up the Red River. But when that ill-used army had returned to the Mississippi, the Fourteenth Regiment was ordered to join that portion of it which was at Morganzia, near the mouth of Red River. This was the Nineteenth Corps and part of the Thirteenth.

The regiment reported to General Emory at Morganzia on the 7th of June, and was attached to the Second Brigade, Second Division, of the Nineteenth Corps, Gen. Birge, commanding. Gen. Birge was absent, and the command of the brigade devolved on Col. Robert Wilson, Major Gardiner, commanding the regiment. We remained at Morganzia till July 3d, performing the usual duties of a camp. The Nineteenth Corps was undergoing reorganization, in anticipation of active duty in the fields, and Gen. Emory had frequent reviews, which, on account of the intense heat, will not soon be forgotten. Morganzia is a bare clay bank lying along the river, with nothing to intercept the scorching rays of the sun, and there was no variation nor interruption to the daily heat. The region was very unhealthy, subject to malarial fevers. We were fortunate in being ordered out of the Department of the Gulf when the Summer was half over; for, going there for the first time at the commencement of hot weather, and under the influence of a diet almost exclusively of salt meat and hard bread, entirely without fresh vegetables, our noble fellows began to sink under the combined evil influences of climate and improper diet; and had we remained till Autumn, it is doubtful whether more than a small fraction of the regiment would have remained fit for duty. We went into the Department of the Gulf more than seven hundred strong. When we entered the Shenandoah Valley in August, we had only five hundred men for duty, the remainder being in General Hospital with chronic diarrhœa or malarial fever—many of whom have since died.

The regular duties at Morganzia were once varied by an expedition of two days to Fort Adams, Mississippi, made by the Second Division, Nineteenth Corps. In the reorganization of the corps, the Fourteenth Regiment was transferred to the First Brigade, Second Division, and Gen. Birge was also transferred to the command of the same.

In the first week in July, the Nineteenth corps moved down the river to New Orleans to take transportation for the north. The corps was encamped at Algiers opposite the city, and went to sea as rapidly as ships could be provided. On the 13th of July, the Fourteenth Regiment and the Seventy-fifth New York went on board the Continental with General Birge and his staff. But the regiment was again destined to be separated—and for want of sufficient room on board, four companies were left behind under Major Gardiner, and followed in the Steamer General Lyon two days later. It was not reunited till August 19th, for the smaller detachment was ordered immediately to Washington, with the First Division of the Nineteenth Corps, whence they went to the mouth of the Monocacy and then into the Shenandoah Valley; while the Second Division went at once to Bermuda Hundred and was attached for ten days to the Army of the James, under General Butler.

While at Bermuda Hundred, Birge's Brigade was sent across ths James River to Deep Bottom with the expedition under Gen. Hancock, sent to make a demonstration to the east of Richmond, and draw attention in that direction while Gen. Burnside's mine was exploded in front of Petersburg. The army, consisting of the Second Corps, several divisions of Cavalry, and Birge's Brigade of the Nineteenth Corps, recrossed the James River in the night of the 29th of July,—the same night on which the mine was exploded— and returned to their former positions. No duty in the two years and a half of our service has been more severe than the return from Deep Bottom on the 29th and 30th of July. The lines at Deep Bottom were left at 11, P. M.; at sunrise Birge's Brigade, which brought up the rear of the army, crossed the river, and at 1, P. M., arrived in camp. But the day was so extremely hot that many of the men fell out, some of them dangerously sun-struck, and many too much exhausted to go further.

At 1, A. M., July 31st, Grover's Division proceeded to the landing at Bermuda Hundred, from whence transportation was obtained to Washington. Gen. Birge with the Fourteenth New Hampshire Volunteers and the Twelfth Maine, embarked on the S. R. Spaulding at noon. The next day the whole division landed in Washington, with orders to take the cars for Monocacy, where the First Division then was. The night was spent in getting the baggage loaded at the station, and at 4 o'clock, in the morning, fresh orders were received to march at once to Tenallytown, a few miles northwest of Washington. The division encamped at Tenallytown, and remained there till the 14th of August, when they took up the line of march for the Shenandoah Valley. Crossing the Potomac at Chain Bridge they marched westward through Leesburg, crossed the Blue Ridge by Snicker's Gap, and joined Sheridan's Army at Berryville on the 18th. The next day the detachment under Maj. Gardiner was returned to the regiment. This detachment had touched at Fortress Monroe on their way from New Orleans and there received orders to go to Washington, where they joined the First Division and went to Monocacy and afterwards to Harper's Ferry by rail. At this time, Gen. Sheridan arrived and relieved Gen. Hunter from the command of the army in Western Virginia. And on the 10th of August, he began a rapid march up the valley through Charlestown and Berryville, attempting to throw himself in the rear of the Rebel Army, then between Winchester and Martinsburg. Notwithstanding Sheridan's rapid movements, the enemy were too quick for him, and made haste to get up the valley; so that when our army arrived near Cedar Creek by the circuitous route it had taken to cut off Gen. Early, they found the Rebel Army still south of them. Sheridan remained in position near Cedar Creek from the 12th to the 15th of August, when being pressed by Early and not having sufficient force to accept a battle in that position, he fell back through Winchester to Berryville, reaching Berryville on the 17th. On the 18th, after being joined by Grover's Division of the Nineteenth Corps, and a division of cavalry, the army—then consisting of the Sixth and Nineteenth Corps, Crook's command of the Eighth Corps, and three divisions of cavalry,—marched to the vicinity of Charlestown and encamped two miles south of that place, facing south. On the 21st of August, the enemy appeared in our front and made a sharp attack upon the Sixth Corps which formed the right wing, but were repulsed. The same night at 11 o'clock, our pickets were quietly withdrawn and the army marched rapidly back to Halltown, seven miles.

The next morning the enemy was again found in our front. A line of substantial earthworks was begun on the line of heights extending around Harper's Ferry from the Shenandoah to the Potomac, and completed in four days. Two reconnoissances were made in the course of that time to ascertain the position and force of the enemy, who were covered by thick woods about a mile in front of us. In the night of the 26th, the enemy disappeared.

On the 28th, Sheridan followed them. The army marched at sunrise in six columns through Charlestown towards Berryville, went into camp two miles south of Charlestown. Here a reconnoissance made by cavalry found the enemy a few miles south of us. On the 3d of September, the army marched nearly to Berryville, where the left wing, formed by the Eighth Corps, was attacked towards night. Sharp fighting continued till after dark. The army went into camp and at once began to throw up a line of breastworks. September 5th, Birge's Brigade made a reconnoissance towards Berryville, but found only a skirmish line of the enemy, which was driven in, and failing to develope any force of the rebels, after three miles advance the brigade returned to camp. After this day no rebels were found in our immediate front. On the 13th, Wilson's Division of Cavalry and one division of the Sixth Corps made a reconnoissance towards Winchester, found the Rebel Army west of the Opequan Creek, about ten miles from our position, attacked them, took the Eighth South Carolina Infantry entire, officers, men and colors, and returned.

On the 18th, Colonel Wilson having resigned and gone home a week before, on account of serious failure of health, Major Alexander Gardiner was commissioned Colonel. Col. Wilson had a severe attack of diphtheria in the Winter of 1863 and 1864, which prostrated him exceedingly for several months. The climate of Louisiana proved unfavorable to him, and he returned to the north with serious disease produced by the malaria of Morganzia and Carrollton. Unwilling to give up to it, he remained at his post until increasing debility left him unable to bear the severities of the active campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, and he reluctantly offered his resignation upon surgeon's certificate of disability. Major Gardiner was mustered as Colonel on the 18th, and on the same afternoon the army received orders to march the next morning.

On that memorable day, September 19th, reveille was beaten at 1, A. M. Coffee being made and drunk, and everything ready for moving, precisely at 2, A. M., the army filed out of camp by divisions, and took the road to Berryville. Reaching that place, we turned off to the right and struck the Winchester Pike, and marched, as usual, upon each side of the road, leaving the pike for the trains of wagons, ambulances and artillery. Distant cannonnading began to be heard at day-light, which came from the Opequan Creek, where our cavalry advance was driving in the rebel outposts. From that time till night the firing never wholly ceased. By 10, A. M., the whole army was in position two miles to the westward of the Opequan, in two lines of battle, with the Eighth Corps in reserve. The advance was made at 11 1-2 o'clock, Birge's Brigade being on the right of the first line, and the Fourteenth New Hampshire on the right of the brigade. The advance was made in splendid style, driving the rebels from their position, and completely breaking the brigades which were directly opposed to us. But the advance was too impetuous to permit us to hold the ground, for it brought us close upon a rebel battery which had been shelling us during the advance, and now at short range raked the line with grape and canister. Our second line was a long distance in the rear, and the rebels were reënforced by Rhodes's Division just arrived from Bunker Hill. The order was therefore given to fall back in order, and firing. In falling back, the Fourteenth Regiment sustained a heavy loss. Thirteen officers of the twenty-one who went into the fight, and one hundred and thirty men, were killed, wounded or prisoners. Only about eight were taken prisoners, and some of these were wounded.

The second line was halted about eighty rods short of the point to which the first line had driven the rebels, and was there ordered to lie down. The regiments of the first line took their place with them. Irregular firing was kept up while the Eighth Corps was getting into position on the right to turn the left flank of the rebels, and connect with the cavalry who were advancing down the Martinsburg Pike. At 4, P. M., the left of the enemy was completely turned and the whole army advanced impetuously, driving the rebels beyond Winchester, taking twenty-five hundred prisoners, besides nearly all their wounded, and five pieces of artillery. The gallant Col. Gardiner lay mortally wounded at the Second Division Hospital, four miles from Winchester; two of his captains, Chaffin and Fosgate, and two lieutenants, Paul and Fisk, were dead upon the battle-field; and eight more were lying with their Colonel, and a hundred brave boys wounded more or less severely. When the army went into camp outside of Winchester in the evening, Capt. Tolman was the senior officer of the regiment and took command. His company had been detached from the regiment as pioneers of the brigade, and on many a march had done good service in bridging creeks and removing obstructions. That day, finding that they were not to be permitted to advance with their regiment, they had thrown away their axes and shovels, and gone into the fight on their own account. Captain Tolman finally formed them with the One Hundred and Fourteenth New York Volunteers, where they fought and advanced with them in the victorious charge of the afternoon.

On the 20th of September, the army moved after the retreating rebels. On the 22d, they fought the brilliant battle of Fisher's Hill; the Fourteenth Regiment, under command of Capt. Tolman, advancing in splendid style against the breastworks with the first line of Grover's Division. The next week was a stirring and spirited chase, our army following the rebels closely and falling upon their rear, until we reached Harrisonburg, eighty miles from Winchester. Here we halted. Capt. Ripley, who had been Acting Inspector of the brigade, on Gen. Birge's staff, was made Provost Marshal of Harrisonburg; and the Fourteenth New Hampshire Volunteers was detailed for provost duty in the town.

September 26th, Capt. Ripley was relieved from duty on Gen. Birge's staff, and took command of the regiment as senior captain. On the 6th of October, no enemy having been found in the neighborhood, Gen. Sheridan began to fall back down the valley, nearer his base of supplies, and arrived, by easy marches, at Cedar Creek on the 10th of October. On the march, Early's Cavalry had appeared and attacked our rear—whereupon Sheridan had ordered his whole cavalry corps to attack them. Merritt, Custer and Wilson, with their three divisions turned upon the rebel cavalry and repulsed them with great rout, taking eleven new pieces of artillery and four hundred prisoners. The army then continued their march unmolested to Cedar Creek, and fortified the camp on the north-east side of it.

Early soon rëappeared at Fisher's Hill, which was about six miles south of Sheridan's position at Cedar Creek. On the 13th of October, a force of the enemy approached within two miles of Sheridan's camp, and opened fire with shell. Several brigades from the Eighth Corps were marched through the woods to meet them and discover their strength,—and a sharp engagement of an hour or more ensued, in which Colonel Wells, Thirty-fourth Massachusetts, was killed. The Sixth Corps, which was on its way to Alexandria through Ashby's Gap, was promptly recalled on the reappearance of the rebel army.

The enemy fell back to Fisher's Hill, and on the 18th, Grover's Division of the Nineteenth Corps were ordered to march at 5 o'clock, the next morning to reconnoitre their position.

On the 19th, before day-light, while Grover's Division was under arms and prepared to march, heavy firing began on the left, in front of the position of the Eighth Corps; the flash of the enemy's guns was seen on the hill where that corps was encamped and more distantly along our whole front beyond our pickets.

An hour later, a long rebel line came over the crest in the rear and left flank of the Nineteenth Corps,—the Eighth Corps having been entirely broken—poured volley after volley into the camp, and were right amongst us. The sun had not yet risen, and the air was somewhat obscured by fog. Two or three brigades of the Nineteenth Corps, which had been thrown out to support the Eighth Corps, were overwhelmed, leaving a large number of dead and wounded on the field. The Corps fell back, fighting, forming by brigades at every favorable piece of ground, until outflanked and borne back by the superior numbers of the enemy. Early had been rëenforced by sixteen thousand men, and in the beginning of the day the attack was received by the Nineteenth Corps and the shattered fragments of the Eighth alone.

The Fourteenth Regiment won the approbation of General Birge, by the bravery and good discipline of its men that day. No regiment behaved better. The ground was stubbornly contested, and so closely was the line followed by the rebels, that when obliged to fall back for a new position, some were cut off and taken prisoners. Among these was Captain Ripley, who was in command of the regiment. He was taken soon after sunrise.

When the position of the Sixth Corps was reached, two miles in the rear of the Nineteenth, a stronger line was formed, and the resistance was more stubborn and furious; but the whole army was forced still two miles further, after which the advance of the rebel army was checked.

Sheridan had been in Washington, and reached Winchester that morning. From there he rode with all possible haste when he heard the artillery from Cedar Creek, and reached the army about ten or eleven o'clock. The enemy were already checked, and General Sheridan at once made preparations for recovering the position that had been lost. While the rebels were kept in check by a ceaseless cannonade, the main line of the army was withdrawn and reformed across the Winchester pike, a mile north of Middletown, confronting the rebel army. Cavalry was on each wing and the three corps arranged in one long line of battle between. At three, P. M., the line was ordered to advance. They met the rebel line securely posted behind stone walls, dislodged them after hard fighting, drove them from wall to wall, from crest to crest; and by sunset had driven them beyond the ground from which the army had been forced in the morning. The infantry then went into camp, and the cavalry, coming in on the right and left, pursued the enemy up the valley to Fisher's Hill, and the next morning followed them up to Mount Jackson. The rebel army left everything in its flight—forty-eight cannon, ambulances, wagons, and five thousand stand of arms. The cavalry brought in two thousand prisoners, which were all they could take care of. The day that opened with disaster, closed with victory, and such a victory as is not often seen. The losses were reported as follows: Crook's command, sixty killed, three hundred and fifty wounded, four hundred prisoners; Nineteenth Corps, four hundred killed, twelve hundred wounded, one hundred prisoners; Sixth Corps, three hundred killed, ten hundred wounded, fifty prisoners; Kitching's Division, twenty killed, one hundred and fifty wounded, fifty-six missing. Total loss, four thousand and eighty-six. The Fourteenth Regiment lost, eight killed, fifty-five wounded and sixteen prisoners.

From this time a division of infantry was kept at Strasburg, four miles in advance of the camp. The remainder of the army remained in camp at Cedar Creek. On the 8th of November, the army voted for the Presidential Electors, each regiment by itself. The vote of the Fourteenth New Hampshire Volunteers was one hundred and ninety-seven for Lincoln, sixteen for McClellan.

On the morning of the 9th, the army marched back on the Winchester Pike and took position north of the Opequan Creek between Newtown and Kernestown. Here substantial earthworks were erected and the army remained until the 30th of December.

General Early moved down the valley to Cedar Creek immediately after Sheridan left that position, and sent his cavalry down to our lines to discover our strength and position. After hard fighting his cavalry fell back to Cedar Creek, and he withdrew his whole force to the south of the creek—and the next day was found by our cavalry beyond Fisher's Hill. Powell's Division pursued part of the rebel cavalry into Luray Valley, and took from them two more cannon.

The Sixth and Eighth Corps were sent away from the valley in December, and towards the close of the month, our cavalry having gone eighty miles up the valley and found no rebels in force nearer than Staunton, where there were three brigades, Gen. Sheridan moved the Nineteenth Corps and the Cavalry Corps back to the terminus of the railroad, between Winchester and Charlestown—where at the close of the year they began to go into Winter quarters.

After Capt. Ripley was taken, the command of the Fourteenth Regiment fell upon Capt. Marston, who was wounded in the arm that day but continued on the field and retained command of the regiment until the middle of December, when Capt. Tolman was promoted to be Major and assumed command. On the 29th of December, Carroll D. Wright, recently promoted to be Colonel, took command. Col. Wright was previously Adjutant of the regiment, and since July 1st, has been Acting Assistant Adjutant General upon the Brigade Staff, where his efficiency and military ability pointed him out as well-fitted to command the regiment.

The Fourteenth Regiment has lost by death about two hundred men and officers. Sixty-five of these have fallen in battle or died of their wounds. The remainder have sunk under disease brought on in the discharge of their duty, in the unhealthy climate in which they have campaigned. Many have been discharged from the service on account of physical disability, produced by similar causes. Therefore, although several hundred recruits have been received since the organization of the regiment, the rolls at present contain only about eight hundred men, one hundred and fifty less than at first, of whom about two hundred are still in hospital with sickness or wounds.

The regiment has suffered the loss of many valuable officers. Col. Gardiner died of his wounds three weeks after the battle of the Opequan—an irreparable loss to the service and the State. (See Biographical Sketches.) Captains Chaffin and Fosgate, Lieutenants Fisk and Paul, Colburn, Webster and Stone,—good men and true, and some of them young men of great promise, all laid down their lives bravely upon that field, or died of wounds there received. Capt. Chandler, Lieutenants Pillsbury and Snell, and Assistant Surgeon Weeks, have died of disease brought on by the exposures and labors of the service.

Rev. E. T. Rowe, who went out with the regiment as its Chaplain, was obliged by continued ill-health to resign in the Summer of 1863, after faithful devotion to the duties of his office as long as his strength permitted.

The limits of the present paper do not permit such extended notice of individuals as their merits demand of a grateful State; but they will not be forgotten.

Other valuable officers have been lost to the regiment, though not all to the service, by promotion to other commands. Capt. Solon A. Carter, an excellent officer and much regretted, has been since July, 1864, Assistant Adjutant General on the staff of Gen. Hinks, commanding a Colored Division in the Army of the James.

Two officers of great excellence presented themselves to Gen. Casey's Board in the Summer of 1863, for examination for commissions in colored regiments. They were Major Samuel A. Duncan and First Lieutenant Stark Fellows. Both passed the Board as Colonel, the first who had passed to that grade in a number of hundreds examined—and were soon commissioned to new regiments, very much regretted and respected in the regiment they had left.

Col. Fellows died of yellow fever in April, 1864, where he was in command of Fort Taylor, leaving an enviable reputation in the service whihc he had honored by his conduct since he first entered it. His monument is in the fine regiment which he alone organized, and had commanded with great credit under all circumstances until his mortal sickness.

Col. Duncan was appointed to the Sixth United State Colored Troops, and went to Yorktown with his regiment, where they early gained a good name. Since Butler landed at City Point in May, 1864, Col. Duncan has been in command of a brigade, and on several occasions has distinguished himself by his gallantry, and by the whole course of his command has gained the approbation of his superior officers. On the 29th of September, he was wounded in the bloody battle north of the James, and was brevetted Brigadier General for his gallant conduct on that day.

FIFTEENTH INFANTRY.

[The following history was kindly furnished by E. E. Pinkham, Adjutant, Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.]

The Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers was raised under the call of the President of the United States for three hundred thousand nine months' men.

Two companies, A and B, also portions of companies E and F, arrived at Camp Colby at Concord, October 2d, 1862, the remaining companies followed soon after.

The position of the several companies in order of battle was according to the rank of captains, as follows:

Co. A, first on the right;
Co. H, second on the right;
Co. D, third on the right;
Co. I, fourth on the right;
Co. G, fifth on the right;
Co. E, sixth on the right;
Co. K, seventh on the right;
Co. F, eighth on the right;
Co. C, ninth on the right;
Co. B, tenth on the left.

The Captains ranked as follows:

Senior Captain, John Aldrich;
Second Captain, John W. Ela;
Third Captain, Lewis W. Osgood;
Fourth Captain, Jonathan H. Johnson;
Fifth Captain, Benjamin F. Hall;
Sixth Captain, Jacob H. Sanborn;
Seventh Captain, Moses Lang;
Eighth Captain, William E. Stearns;
Ninth Captain, George E. Pinkham;
Tenth Captain, William Gordon.

The regiment was formally mustered into the United States service by Capt. C. Holmes, Seventeenth United States Infantry, in the State House Yard, November 12th, 1862, at which time the colors were presented by Governor Berry, Col. Kingman responding.

On the morning of the 13th of November, Col Kingman having orders to proceed with his command to New York and report to Major General N. P. Banks, the regiment broke camp, marched to the railroad depot, and at 8 o'clock, A. M., left on a special train for New York via Worcester and Norwich. Arriving at Allyn's Point about 7, P. M., went on board the Steamer "City of New York" and reached New York early the next morning (November 14th.) Proceeded to the Park Barracks at 8 1-2 o'clock, A. M., where rations were furnished. At 4 o'clock, P. M., the line of march was taken up for Union Race Course, Jamaica, Long Island, distant nine miles. Arriving there at 8 1-2 o'clock, P. M., the officers and men found themselves obliged to seek quarters for the night upon the seats occupied by the spectators at the races, as the tents which were to have been sent in advance of the regiment had not arrived. The next day shelter tents were furnished, these though better than no tents, afforded but a poor protection against the storm of this day, and the cold weather, and the men suffered extremely. The 17th, their hearts were gladdened by the arrival of A tents.

This encampment was designated Camp N. P. Banks, and was under the command of Col. T. E. Chickering, Forty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers. Here the regiment remained whilst the details of the secret expedition, of which it was to form a part, were completed.

The following officers were detailed from the regiment: Lieut. W. T. Larkin, Co. K, for the signal service; Lieuts. Alva M. Kimball, Co. I, and W. M. Durgin, Co. D, detailed to act as commissaries of subsistence during the voyage. Sergt. Arthur L. Merrick was appointed color bearer. The following named Corporals were designated color guard: Henry W. Howland, Co. C; John Graham, Co. E; William B. Chadwick, Co. D; Thomas Dunlap, Co. F; Hiram Hook, Co. G; Charles McGregor, Co. H; Daniel C. Hussey, Co. I.

Sunday November 30th, four companies, A, D, H and I, under command of Lieut-Col. Frost, accompanied by Assistant Surgeon Towle and Sergt.-Major Wallingford, left camp and marched to Brooklyn to embark on board the little propeller J. S. Green. On arrival at the vessel Col. Frost deeming the boat too small for the accommodation of so large a number of men, protested against placing his whole command on board, and remonstrated with the embarking officer who seemed bent on sending the whole number on an unknown voyage in the vessel, whether the capacity was sufficient or not. After twenty-four hours' delay the matter was compromised by embarking Companies A and D, and twenty men from Company H. The men from Company H, being under command of Lieut. Perkins. The remainder of the detachment rejoined the regiment at camp.

Subsequent events proved that the boat was filled to its utmost capacity. It was built to run on the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal and the river, and was never intended for open-sea navigation. Sailed from New York, December 3d, and the voyage was uncommonly pleasant until within a day's sail of Ship Island, when, on the night of December 15th, a violent norther peculiar to the Gulf came on, rendering the little craft unmanagable. The tiller and steering apparatus completely gave way, and, drifting wholly at the mercy of the waves, it was only by the utmost exertions of the boat's officers and crew that the vessel was kept afloat until the gale subsided, which fortunately occurred in a few hours. Making Ship Island the next day, orders were received to go to New Orleans; arrived there December 18th, disembarked at Carrollton, December 19th.

On Wednesday, December 3d, the rest of the regiment under command of Col. Kingman, struck their tents and marched to Brooklyn City Armory, where they remained during the night.

The next day companies E, G, I, and the remainder of Co. H, embarked on board the propellor Prometheus. This detachment was commanded by Col. Kingman and was accompanied by the Adjutant, Quartermaster, Surgeon and Chaplain. Sailed December 5th, and reached Fortress Monroe after a rough passage, December 8th, at 2 o'clock, A. M. Made Hilton Head where a supply of coal was taken, December 13th. Arrived at Ship Island

December 21st, at 3 o'clock, P. M., proceeded immediately to New Orleans, thence to Carrollton, where they disembarked December 22d, and encamped on Shell Road, joining the detachment already arrived.

Companies B, C, F and K, under command of Major Blair remained at the Armory at Brooklyn until December 13th, when they sailed on the Steamer Cambria, a staunch and swift iron vessel with four water tight compartments, built on the Clyde and intended for Scottish Waters, but having been devoted to the purposes of the rebellion, was captured off Charleston, S. C., by one of Uncle Sam's cruisers while attempting to run the blockade. Before crossing the Bahama Banks several days of rough weather were experienced, but the good ship out-rode the storms and was safely moored at Key West, when the supply of coal was replenished. Sailed thence to Ship Island where orders were received to go to New Orleans. Arrived there on Christmas about 9 o'clock, P. M.; the next day landed at Carrollton. The regiment was now united again and encamped on the Shell Road about one half mile from the river. This encampment was called Camp Mansfield, and included several regiments, under the command of the senior Colonel. Col. Kingman commanded the post until the arrival of the One Hundred and Sixty-second New York Volunteers when Col. Littlejohn of that regiment, ranking, assumed the position.

The location of the camp was low and near the swamps, and the frequent rains soaked the ground so that oftentimes the mud was very deep, rendering the situation very unpleasant. The 22d of the month, however, the condition of affairs was somewhat bettered by removing camp a short distance to dryer ground.

January 7th, the old Belgian muskets, furnished the regiment at Concord, were exchanged for Enfield Rifles. January 8th, companies B, Capt. Ela, and C, Capt. Lang, were detached for Provost Guard duty about Carrollton and encamped on some vacant lots near the market. Capt. Ela was appointed Captain of the Guard and Deputy Provost Marshal, with Headquarters at an Engine House near the centre of the town. The duties devolving on these companies were to preserve order in Carrollton and vicinity; to guard the government stores and to do picket duty on the river below the parapet, which was about two miles above Carrollton.

On the 23d, the troops at Camp Mansfield marched seven miles on the Shell Road, equipped in heavy marching order. The regiment having been assigned to the First Brigade, Second Division, Nineteenth Army Corps, and ordered to remove to Camp Parapet, distant about two and a half miles from Carrollton. January 28th, left Camp Mansfield and pitched tents at the Parapet. The brigade was composed of the Sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers, Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers and Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and was commanded by Brig. Gen. Neal Dow. The two regiments first named were three years' troops, the two last nine months' men. Brigadier General T. W. Sherman commanded the division.

Up to this time though there had been considerable sickness in the regiment, the losses by death had been small. The reports to Feb. 1st, show a loss of two commissioned officers. Surgeon Hall resigned on account of ill health, and Lieut. Kimball acting commissary of the regiment, also resigned.

February 2d, the brigade was reviewed by Gen. Dow. The 6th, Quartermaster Moody was detailed as Acting Brigade Quartermaster. The 11th, First Lieut. Thomas Cogswell, Jr., Co. A, was detailed as Acting A. D. C., on Gen. Dow's staff. The 26th, Capt. George E. Pinkham, Co. I, was detailed to take charge of some paroled prisoners of the Eighth United States Infantry and acted in this capacity until March 13th. The 26th, Lieut. Moody was relieved from duty as Acting Brigade Quartermaster, and resumed his duties with the regiment.

March 1st, Lieut. Woodbury M. Durgin was appointed acting commissary of the regiment. March 5th, the medical director of Gen. Sherman's Division in his report of his visit to the various hospitals and regiments of the command, speaks of the "Fifteenth New Hampshire as rapidly improving, officers and men becoming very much interested in improving their camp." The 8th, Dr. Horsch, the surgeon commissioned to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Dr. Hall, arrived, and Lieut. Cogswell, Acting A. D. C., on Gen. Dow's staff, was at his own request relieved from further duty as such and returned to company. The 9th, the brigade marched to New Orleans and passed in review before Gen. Sherman. The 15th, received orders to be ready at a moment's notice to embark for Baton Rouge. The 16th, Assistant Surgeon Towle was detailed for duty at U. S. Barracks at New Orleans. The 20th, Chaplain Wheelock was detailed as Deputy Superintendent of negro labor, by S. O., No. 78, Head Quarters Department of the Gulf.

The following extracts are taken from a report of the regiment made by the Acting Assistant Inspector General of the command:

Drill good, many of the manœuvres in the school of the battalion were executed with promptness and credit to officers and men.

REMARKS.

The Colonel of this regiment is sick. The vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Colonel has not been filled. The Major exhibits commendable efficiency and zeal in the conduct of the regiment.

April 9th, Lieut. Moody was again detailed Acting Brigade Quartermaster. The 11th, Assistant Surgeon Janvrin was ordered in connection with his other duties, to attend the morning call of Co. D, Twelfth Maine Volunteers, and the sick of said company were provided for in the hospital of this regiment. The 21st, companies B and C, were returned to the regiment and Co. K, Capt. Hall, was detailed to take their place. The 24th the regiment received orders to be in readiness to move at a mo-, ment's notice during the next twenty-four hours, with two days cooked rations. The 25th, Co. F, Capt. Gordon, was sent to join Co. K. The 30th, Lieut. John B. Hendley was appointed Acting Regimental Quartermaster.

Col. Kingman and Lieut. Col. Blair were both sick from April 1st, to May 13th, during which time the command devolved upon Major Aldrich, who shew himself fitted for the task, and sustained the discipline and drill with vigor.

May 19th, received orders to be in readiness to embark at a moment's notice for Baton Rouge, supplied with ten days rations.

Embarked on board the Steamer United States the 20th, sailed on the morning of the 21st, with twenty-six officers and five hundred and forty enlisted men for duty. The whole number of companies were with the regiment, Companies F and K, having been relieved from duty at Carrollton. Arrived at Springfield Landing at 1 o'clock, P. M., on the 22d. The brigade marched ten miles on the Clinton Road and encamped for the night at Beulah Plains. On the 23d, were joined by the Second Brigade of the division; moved cautiously through the woods, with frequent halts, two and a half miles towards Port Hudson, formed in line of battle, then advanced a short distance and halted for the night. During the night there was a very heavy shower and but very few escaped a thorough drenching. Sunday the 24th, again moved towards the rebel works expecting to encounter a rebel force at some earthworks about two miles from their main line of defences, but found them abandoned; halted here in line of battle. Companies D and E, were ordered to the front in support of the picket line which was advanced to within one thousand yards of the enemy's defensive works. These consisted of a parapet seven miles in length, extending from the river below Port Hudson to a bayou above, with outer works commanding all avenues of approach; and a heavy growth of timber had been fallen for the distance of one half a mile from the parapet. These works were held by upwards of eight thousand men and their position was worth at least twenty thousand more. Major Gen. Gardiner, formerly of the regular army and said to have been considered the best disciplinarian among the rebel brigadiers before his promotion to his present rank, was in command of the place. On the morning of the 25th of May, the Nineteenth Army Corps lay before this rebel stronghold. On the extreme right was the division of Gen. Weitzel, an officer held in high esteem for his fighting qualities. On the right centre, the division of Gen. Grover, formerly distinguished as the commander of a brigade in "Hooker's Division" in the Peninsular campaign. On the left centre, the division of Gen. Augur, known for his good conduct at Cedar Mountain, and the friend of Gen. Banks. On the extreme left, the division of Gen. Sherman, famous as commander of Sherman's Battery during the Mexican War. The whole under command of Major Gen. Banks.

Gen. Sherman's division consisted of two brigades, Gen. Dow's and Gen. Nicholson's; each brigade numbered about twelve hundred men. Gen. Dow had the right of the division and Gen. Nicholson, the left.

May 25th, Companies D and E, were relieved. May 26th, four companies from the Fifteenth with detachments from other regiments went to the front to burn some buildings that were occupied by the rebels; the purpose was accomplished without loss to our regiment. At 6 o'clock, P. M., four companies A, D, E and K, under Major Aldrich, were ordered to the front to support the pickets.

May 27th, an assault was ordered along the whole line; the four companies under Major Aldrich thrown out on the flanks as sharpshooters and skirmishers did good execution in picking off the rebel artillery men. The other six companies formed part of the assaulting column of the brigade, commanded by Gen. Dow, and led by Generals Sherman and Dow. The brigade covered the south end of the eastern portion of the enemy's works, and lay in line of battle about three-fourths of a mile from the enemy. The intervening distance was level. Just in front was a long dense belt of woods some sixty rods in depth; then an opening of some forty rods in width and one hundred and fifty in length from right to left; then woods again, between this opening and the enemy. There was a large gap in the woods of some forty rods in width, leading direct from this cleared ground to a broad level space, on the further side of which was the earth bank of the enemy. The distance from the line of trees nearest the rebels to their works was about eighty rods or one fourth of a mile. On the right of this front is a deep ravine with steep, irregular sides running direct to the enemy's works, forming a right angle at the point of intersection. South of the east end of this gorge, in the north east corner of the clearing next the enemy, was the former residence of a planter named Slaughter, with the outbuildings. Behind the house, which was surrounded by substantial fences, was a spur of the forest. Between the house and the enemy's works lay the plantation itself. At 1 o'clock, P. M., the brigade was drawn up in the first clearing in front of its position, behind this spur of the forest. Between it and the enemy, were, first the trees, second the fences around Slaughter's house, of which there were four about six rods apart, then the plantation, on the right the ravine already spoken of. Nearest the woods was the Sixth Michigan in line of battle, four rods in the rear was the Twenty-sixth Connecticut, about the same distance in rear of the Connecticut troops came the Fifteenth New Hampshire, then the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth New York. On the extreme left were several batteries of artillery which played through the gap in the woods upon the rebel works. The forenoon had been passed in sharp skirmishing along the whole length of the lines, the light troops covering themselves with stumps, bushes and every thing that afforded shelter had pushed in many places nearly up to the rebel works. For two days the enemy dared not show himself outside his defences. The air was filled with minie balls, cannon shot and shell, which however, did but little damage to either side. About 1 o'clock, P. M., the artillery opened in earnest and for one half hour thundered upon the enemy. Huge volumes of smoke enveloped the batteries concealing the gunners, rose in clouds and settled densely upon the whole field. The fire was tremendous and the enemy replied with an incessant shower of every conceivable missile; fortunately most of his fire passed over the brigade as it stood in column of regiments awaiting the word to advance; then a confused noise was heard on the left, and soon a long train of wagons drawn by mules, loaded with bags of cotton, boards and long poles for bridging the ditch, and escorted by three hundred negroes, burst through the smoke and hurried to the front. Often a mule would fall in the harness and detain the whole column for a moment, but on they hurried amid the cries of wounded men, the moans of brutes, curses, and the explosion of cannon. At length they passed. The brigade was still erect, expectant, silent and ready. Suddenly the artillery ceased, the smoke lifted, "Forward!" shouted Gen. Sherman—"Forward!" repeated Gen. Dow, and the brigade was in motion. In a moment the command was, "Double Quick." The enemy's fire was now terribly deadly. The artillery which had screened the brigade by the volume of smoke was silent, and gave the enemy opportunity of accurate aim. Passing through the scattering trees, over the four parallel fences by Slaughter's house, while the men fell like the falling grain, the brigade was in the open ground. Here they were obliged to halt and endeavor to correct the alignment which was necessarily disordered in passing through the woods and over the fences. The confusion was inextricable. The fire of the enemy now concentrated upon the dense column of the brigade, murderous and overwhelming. The brigade melted away. Order could no more be restored than from chaos and the attempt was abandoned. The bravest hurried to the front, the cowards to the rear, the whole knew not what to do; to retreat was unthought of, and finally the whole brigade was swept away to the right and went into the ravine. Those in extreme advance — and the Fifteenth was largely represented there—seeing their support disappear, leaped into the gorge themselves while their officers hurried back to arouse the middle and rear. Gen. Dow had been wounded and carried from the field. There was no possibility of reforming the brigade; nothing could be done but to push on, surmount the parapet if possible and attack the enemy in his teeth. Once more the men rallied and hurried forward at double quick, and getting in perfect range, the enemy opened his fire, concentrated from more than a mile of his works, direct upon them, his numbers were at least equal to theirs. However they pressed on. The affair was most bloody. Shells bursting in all directions, bullets in showers. Solid shot tear up the ground. The air is pregnant with death. The wounded are mute. They are still as the dead. Lieut. Col. Blair had charge of the advance, as he started the second time he asked Gen. Sherman for instructions. "Lead them ahead, straight ahead, dead on the enemy's works," were the orders he received. The advance proved unsuccessful. The advance was obliged to fall back to the ravine in order to reform. Gen. Sherman having been fatally wounded was taken from the field by men of the Fifteenth. The command then fell upon Col. Cowles, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth New York, Col. Clark of the Sixth Michigan being already wounded. Again the men rallied, with loud huzzas advanced a few rods—the column wavered, the rear fell out; Col. Cowles ordered a retreat and fell mortally wounded about forty rods outside the enemy's works. The column disappeared in the ravine again. The brigade was scattered over the field where it fell, or lying in the ravine from the point of the first repulse to that occupied by the extreme advance, a distance of some forty rods. There was one more attempt to gain the works. A common soldier came marching along alone, leading a white war horse with his right hand and waving the stars and stripes with his left, and calling upon his discouraged comrades to rally, and rally they did. It was a stirring sight to witness. The bank of the ravine was instantly alive with soldiers, the parapet was ablaze again, and the men fell fearfully fast, still they pressed on. The centre and rear of the column did not waver. The advance hurried forward, was nearing the parapet, it was not ten rods off; here Lieut. Colonel Blair fell, severely wounded in the arm; the brave fellow with the white horse pressed forward a few steps beyond and fell, blood streaming from his mouth. The men who had rushed forward had nearly all fallen, and with this ended the fight. At night-fall the troops were withdrawn. The attempt to storm Port Hudson had failed along the whole line. The loss had been heavy. It was estimated that the corps had lost one fourth of its fighting men including a great portion of the best material. The enemy was encouraged and the result of the siege rendered doubtful.

The Fifteenth on leaving the field, occupied a position in a clearing about nine hundred yards from the parapet, which position it retained until May 29th, when it moved a short distance to the right into the woods. From this time to June 13th, though there was no general engagement, the regiment had a large amount of work to do, being continually called upon to furnish details for sharpshooters, pickets, fatigue parties and skirmishers, usually having two companies on duty as pickets, and four supporting batteries. May 28th, the dead of the division were collected under a flag of truce and buried.

June 3d, Col. Kingman was placed under arrest, by order of Gen. Dwight, who was in command of the Second Division, in place of Gen. Sherman, wounded May 27th, so badly that he had to suffer amputation of the leg. The cause of Col. Kingman's arrest was not officially made public, but it was supposed to have been prompted by some officer who had heard him make remarks which were taken as criticisms on the manner in which the operations of the siege were conducted. The order required Col. Kingman to report to the commandant at Baton Rouge who would assign quarters and limits. The Colonel did no more duty with the regiment, being kept under arrest until the day after it left for home, when he was ordered to rejoin his command.

From the 3d to the 14th of June, the work of the regiment was exceedingly hard, large details being constantly on duty day and night throwing up earthworks, building magazines, mounting guns, digging rifle-pits, supporting batteries and as pickets, usually under fire. June 13th, fifty men from this regiment under Lieuts. Seavey and Perkins, of Co. H, with the same number from the Twenty-sixth Connecticut, making one hundred men in all, under command of Lieut. Seavey made a demonstration against the enemy's works. Before advancing they were addressed by Colonel Clark, commanding the brigade, who told them that if there was a man among them who feared to die, he then had an opportunity to honorably retire, but that they must choose then or not at all. Not a man of the Fifteenth left the ranks. One only of the Twenty-sixth Connecticut. They were then deployed as skirmishers and ordered to advance across the scene of the late battle, coolly and steadily toward the rebel parapet, up to it, and over it. They obeyed their instructions until many of them had fallen, when, for some unaccountable reason not being supported, they laid down, and, covering themselves as they could, fought away until after dark. There never was a braver act than the charge of that line of skirmishers. The rebels were struck with admiration, and after they were well up, issued orders to kill no more of such brave fellows, but by a sally to endeavor to capture them. But for this forbearance of the enemy probably not a man could have escaped. The object of this movement seemed to have been to deceive the enemy as to the point of attack intended for the general engagement of the next day, Sunday, June 14th. The loss of the regiment in this affair was thirteen killed and wounded, or more than one-fourth of the number engaged. Saturday night the commanders of regiments were summoned to the Division Headquarters, to learn their respective parts in the plan of action for the following day.

At 1 o'clock, Sunday morning, the men were aroused, the outposts called in, a hasty breakfast of hot coffee and hard tack was served and the command marched six miles by a circuitous route to a position near the river, from which point the charge was to be made. Soon after sunrise the Fifteenth commanded by Lieut. Col. Blair, followed by the Twenty-sixth Connecticut, marched up the road by the right flank to within seven hundred yards of the rebel works. Here formed in line of battle and advanced about four hundred yards under a heavy artillery fire, when suddenly a concealed ravine filled with fallen timbers, under brush and briar vines, was discovered. It was impassable. There was no path to the right or the left. There was a halt for a moment under a sharp fire too high to do much damage to the Fifteenth, but passing over did terrible execution in the Twenty-sixth Connecticut. Then the regiments plunged into the gorge. In ten minutes not a man of the attacking column was to be seen on the level plain, all were making strenuous exertions to force their way through the ravine. Some struggled through and came up on the other side, but to no purpose. Nothing could be done. The division remained there during the day, intensely tortured by heat, hunger and thirst. The enemy's artillery and a portion of their rifle-pits enfiladed the valley, but the dense under brush concealed the men, so that but little harm was done. At nightfall the command was withdrawn. The Fifteenth was formed at the point whence the charge was made in the morning, and immediately took position about six hundred yards from the parapet, in support of a battery of six pieces commanding a road by which it was thought the rebels might, if satisfied they could hold their works, no longer attempt to escape. The loss in the Fifteenth this day was two commissioned officers, and twenty-four enlisted men wounded. Lieut.-Col. Blair was hit by a minie ball on the arm previously wounded. Besides those wounded, the regiment at this time met with the loss of an officer, Capt. Johnson, who, by his constant devotion to his duty had won the respect and esteem of all. The last work performed by Capt. J. H. Johnson, of Co. D, was to lead his company in the charge of the 14th of June, and remain with his command during the day. On coming off the field at night he was completely prostrated by continued exertion and the next day was taken to the division hospital. The 19th of June, he was conveyed to the hospital at Baton Rouge, where he lay very ill until August 4th, when he left Baton Rouge on the hospital steamer, St. Mary. Reached his home at Deerfield, N. H., the 16th of the month, and died there October 14th, of disease contracted in the United States service.

The regiment had now fully attained an honorable standing in the army.

The following extracts are taken from the official report of the engagement of the 14th of June, made by Col. T. S. Clark, commanding the brigade, to the division commander, Brigadier General Dwight:

* * * * *

"Agreeable to the orders received from the General commanding the division, I ordered the Sixth Michigan Volunteers and Fourteenth Maine Volunteers, to the extreme left, for the purpose of storming the enemy's works on the river, which I afterwards found they could not accomplish, owing to the nature of the ground. Returning to the Mount Pleasant Road, I deployed my skirmishers, supporting them by the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth New York Volunteers, (Col. Smith commanding.) They were immediately followed by the Fifteenth New Hampshire Volunteers and the Twenty-sixth Connecticut Volunteers, whom I brought forward by column of companies on the main road, but was compelled to deploy, as the enemy was pouring into us a well directed fire of shot and shell. As the field would not permit of their being deployed but for a short distance, I was again obliged to form them into column, by division. I mention the latter circumstances more particularly, as the several movements ordered, were executed with alacrity, and with a coolness and precision which is deserving of special praise.

* * * * *

Both officers and men conducted themselves in a manner worthy of American soldiers. The nine months' men have demonstrated, by their gallant conduct, that they can be relied on in any emergency."

* * * * *

Now began the hardest of the work, requiring every one to be on the alert day and night. The picket line was extended until it communicated with the centre again. Under cover of night strong batteries were erected opposite the three advanced works of the enemy, and mortars and heavy artillery planted.

The rebel work next the river and the strongest of all their works, had been christened the "Malakoff." While the Federal batteries were being erected the rebels were not idle, though neither side molested the other, but were strengthening their works. An enormous seventeen gun battery was erected opposite the "Malakoff." At length the work was completed and fire was opened simultaneously from each side. For several days the thunder of the artillery was kept up, but, though the rebel guns were dismounted and the rebel flag shot away several times and finally not raised again, there was no breach made sufficient to warrant an attempt at an assault.

June 26th, the regiment went into the rifle-pits in front of its position, where it remained until the 30th of the month, when it was ordered to a position near the river, from which an assault had been ordered by Gen. Dwight. At 10 o'clock, P. M., entered a trench leading to the "Malakoff," and halted within two hundred yards of the rebels, waiting for the order to charge. The Fifteenth was to leave the trench in the advance, by the right flank, and attack the river side of the works, entering by the steps cut for the rebel pickets to come out by. After waiting half an hour, Gen. Dwight's order was countermanded by Gen. Banks. The regiment remained in the trenches until the 3d of July, when it was ordered to its former position in support of the battery. On the 5th of July, again occupied the trenches. On the 6th, were ordered to Springfield Landing, marched two miles and were then ordered back to the battery position. At 11 o'clock, P. M., the same day, went into the rifle-pits and remained until 5 o'clock, A. M., of the 7th, then resumed former position.

After the attempt to breach the enemy's citadel or "Malakoff," before spoken of, another plan was resolved upon. Commencing at the outworks close by the river a deep trench was dug in a zigzag course, but in the general direction of the citadel. This was about eight feet wide and sometimes of even greater depth, so deep that troops could be thrown forward through the valley without danger. The negro element was brought into requisition and gradually they dug their way to the very base of the "Malakoff." Then commenced the ascent of the hill. The ditch was dug very deep and the workmen were protected by sharpshooters ranged along the edges of the bank made by the dirt thrown out. The trench was kept constantly full of soldiers to repel any sally that might be made to drive away the diggers. Slowly they ascended the hill and reached the rifle-pits of the enemy just outside their citadel. On each side the sharpshooters were within two rods of each other, and woe be to him who exposed himself unguardedly. Sand bags were piled up to protect the head and person. Behind these stood the marksman always on the alert, his rifle aimed through a slight crevice between the bales. Having approached thus near, the work was continued by running two saps or mines directly under the very centre of the citadel. The rebels suspecting all was not right commenced a counter-work intending the two works to meet and thus prevent their mound being blown up. During the digging of the mine, parties were continually engaged in throwing hand grenades and occasionally a lump of dirt, an old tin pan or a cartridge box and finally pieces of impromptu poetry attached to some other object, would come over. The mine was completed and fifteen hundred pounds of powder ready to be deposited in such a manner as to have lifted an acre of earth to the sky—the nature of the soil favoring such operations. Similar operations were going on at other points along the line, and by the 6th of July, the preparations were complete. The army was nerving itself for another charge, which was to be made during the confusion occasioned by the exploding of the mines, feeling confident that, if once within the works, they could easily take care of the garrison. Gen. Banks personally inspected the works and seemed full of confidence. Rebel deserters reported the garrison as having lost confidence and that they had been living on mule meat over a week. The Union troops were elated and hopeful.

On the night of the 7th of July a messenger reached General Banks' headquarters from General Grant, with news of the fall of Vicksburg. Early the next morning the cheering along the lines announced that the fact was known to the army. The rebel soldiers raised their heads in astonishment, but they were not long in doubt as to the cause of the rejoicing. Soon General Gardner sent a communication, under a flag of truce, to General Banks, inquiring if the report was true. On receipt of General Banks' reply, commissioners were appointed to arrange terms of surrender. An unconditional surrender was demanded, and reluctantly complied with. Afterwards General Banks restored to the officers their side arms, servants and private property. The next day, July 9th, the garrison, of over six thousand men, with its arms, ammunition, &c., formally surrendered. Brigadier-General Andrews, chief of staff, who represented General Banks on the occasion, received the sword of General Gardner which he immediately returned.

On the 10th of July the regiment moved into Port Hudson for picket duty, but returned the same day at 3 o'clock, P. M. On the 11th, the regiment was transferred to the second brigade, third division, Colonel Fearing, Eighth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, commanding the brigade, and marched seven miles along the Clinton Road where it remained doing picket duty until the 18th of the month, when it moved inside the works and was attached to the second brigade, United States Forces, Port Hudson, under command of Colonel E. D. Johnson. July 25th, Lieut. W. T. Larkin, company K, was detailed for special service by order of Brigadier-General Andrews, commanding United States Forces in Port Hudson. This day the regiment turned over all ordnance and camp stores, and the next day, July 26th, embarked on the steamer City of Madison, for Cairo, Ill. The regiment reached Cairo, August 3rd, and was transferred to freight cars without seats, and left by railroad for Chicago, arriving there August 5th. From Chicago, the journey was made in passenger cars. At very many places along the route the people furnished the regiment with excellent collations, so that though worn and weary, the men did not want for tempting viands. At Buffalo, New York, especially was the reception most gratifying. Large tables were spread in the spacious depot, with an abundance of substantial food and everything a whole-souled, generous-hearted people could do to alleviate the sufferings of the sick (there were many such) was done.

The regiment arrived at Concord, New Hampshire, at 8 o'clock, A. M., August 8th; was furloughed until the 11th, and mustered out and paid off the 13th of August, 1863. From the 31st of July to the date of muster out, sixteen men died.

Nearly fifty of the men who were reported sick when the regiment started for home, grew worse and had to be left at various hospitals on the way, and when the regiment was mustered out of service, though there were thirty-nine officers and seven hundred and two enlisted men whose names were borne on the rolls, less than thirty officers and not four hundred and fifty enlisted men were fit for duty. The seige of Port Hudson and the climate of Louisiana, had thus sadly thinned the ranks.

FIRST LIGHT BATTERY.

The First New Hampshire Light Battery was recruited in the city of Manchester, by Lieuts. F. M. Edgell and E. H. Hobbs, during the month of August, 1861, and was mustered into the service of the United States, on the twenty-sixth day of September following. On the thirty-first of October the company proceeded to Washington completely armed and equipped as a six gun battery, where it remained for one week in the Camp of Instruction. It was then assigned to the First Division of the Army of the Potomac, Major General McDowell, commanding, and moved from thence to Munson's Hill, Virginia. In the advance upon Manassas, March 10, 1862, the Battery marched with its Division, accompanying that portion of the forces, which, under General Augur, occupied the City of Fredericksburg, Va., on the 18th of April, 1862. Upon the advance of McDowell's Corps toward Richmond, on the 25th of May following, the Battery had performed one day's march, when it was ordered with its Division to the relief of Gen. Banks, in the Shenandoah Valley, and made a forced march to Thoroughfare Gap. On the 15th of June, it returned to Fredericksburg.

On the 5th of August, following, one section of this organization, under Lieut. Edgell, accompanied a reconnoissance under the command of Col. (now Brig. General) Cutler of the Sixth Wisconsin Volunteers, which proceeded rapidly to Frederickshall station, on the Virginia Central Railroad, destroyed a portion of the road and much public property, and returned on the 8th without loss.

The other sections of the Battery, under Capt. Gerrish, accompanied Brig. Gen. Gibbon on a reconnoissance towards Bowling Green, and after some skirmishing with the enemy's cavalry at Thornburg, also returned safely to Fredericksburg on the 8th. On the following day it marched with its Division to join Gen. Pope at Culpepper Court House, and arrived at Cedar Mountain on the 11th of August, two days after the battle at that place.

On the retreat of Gen. Pope's command, the Battery was engaged with the enemy at Rappahannock station on the 22d of August, and at Sulphur Springs on the 26th of the same month, and reached the battle-ground at Bull Run on the 29th. Towards evening of the same day, a reconnoitering force consisting of the Brigade of Gen. Hatch, the First N. H. Battery, and a few cavalry troops, was sent down the Warrenton road; met the enemy in force near Groveton, and after a short but severe engagement was repulsed. The Battery lost in this action two men killed; Lieut. Wadleigh and several men severely wounded; Capt. Gerrish and ten men taken prisoners, and one gun captured by the enemy. On the following day it was again engaged, but without further loss, and retired with its Division during the night to Centreville, and finally to Upton's Hill, Va., near Washington.

The Battery having been recruited, made a tedious march through Maryland and was engaged in action at Antietam on the 17th of September, serving in the Corps of Gen. Hooker. The New Hampshire Battery commenced the action on the extreme right at daylight on the morning of the 17th, and rendered efficient service in different parts of the field during the entire day. It sustained but slight loss, having only three men wounded and a few horses killed and disabled.

When, late in October 1862, the army again crossed the Potomac at Berlin, the Battery was detached from its Division and ordered to the assistance of Gen. Pleasanton, who with his Brigade of Cavalry was in advance of the army. It joined that command at Philomont, on the 2d of November, 1862. During that day and the next, it followed the retreating enemy closely, and was repeatedly engaged but without loss. On the evening of the 3d, when the enemy was forced from his last position near Upperville, and driven through Ashby's Gap, the Battery was ordered to remain at the former place and rejoin its Division, which arrived on the 5th instant.

Capt. Gerrish and Lieut. Wadleigh, now rejoined the Battery which proceeded to Brooks's station, near Aquia Creek, Va. In December following, it took active part in the attack upon Fredericksburg. It crossed the river on the 12th, and immediately became engaged, and remained in position during the night. On the morning of the 13th, it moved to its position in line of battle, which was on the extreme left of Reynold's Corps of Franklin's Grand Division. Here it soon became engaged with the Batteries of the enemy, and continued fighting until dark. On this day it lost three men killed, fifteen wounded, and about twenty horses killed and disabled, with considerable damage to carriages. Capt. Gerrish, then acting Chief of Artillery of First Division, was wounded early in the action and taken from the field. The Battery remained at this locality until the night of the 15th, when it was ordered to cross the river and take position to cover the withdrawal of the troops. A few days later it went into winter quarters at Pratt's Landing, on Potomac Creek. On the 20th of January, 1863, when the attempt was made by Gen. Burnside to move to the fords of the Rappahannock, the Battery marched to Beriah Church a distance of fifteen miles, during one of the severest storms of the season, and over almost impassable roads. It returned to camp on the 23d, where it remained during the Winter, as no further movements were attempted for several months.

On the 7th of March, 1863, Capt. Gerrish being still disabled by his wound, resigned his command. On the 28th of April, the Battery moved with its corps toward the Rappahannock, below Fredericksburg, and was there engaged with the enemy on the 29th and 30th of April, and 2d of May. On that day it marched with its Corps to the assistance of Gen. Hooker, at Chancellorsville, which place it reached early on the morning of the 3d, and being assigned a position on the line of the Third Corps, was again engaged on the 4th and 5th of May, sustaining but slight loss. On the reorganization of the Artillery in May, 1863, the N. H. Battery was transferred from the First Corps to the Artillery Reserve. On the 4th of June following, it was assigned the duty of guarding the passage of the Rappahannock, at United States ford, which service it performed for several days.

On the 13th of June, the Battery marched with the Reserve Artillery for Maryland, and when the hostile armies met at Gettysburg, it again took active part. Arriving on the field early on the morning of July 2d, it was soon put in position on Cemetery

Hill, which post it maintained till noon of the 4th, doing excellent service, especially in assisting to repel the furious assaults of the enemy on the 3d. Although exposed for many hours to a destructive fire, it had but three men wounded, and sustained only a small loss in horses and material. The Battery continued to serve with the Reserve Artillery in the subsequent movements of the Army, until the 15th of October, 1863, when it was assigned to the Third Army Corps, and joined that command at Union Mills, on the same day. On the 7th of November, 1863, it crossed the Rappahannock, with its Corps, at Kelley's ford, and on the 8th, being with the advanced Division, was engaged in a sharp skirmish with the enemy at Brandy Station. It also took part in the movement across the Rapidan, late in November, and was for a short time engaged with the enemy at Mine Run, on the 30th. Subsequently it returned to Brandy Station, where it went into winter quarters.

Upon the organization of the Army in the Spring of 1864, the Battery was assigned to the Second Army Corps, Major General Hancock commanding, and joined these forces at Stevensburg, Virginia, on the 19th of April. When the grand army moved towards Richmond, the Battery moved with its Corps, breaking camp on the evening of May 3d, and crossing the Rapidan at Ely's ford on the 4th. It first engaged with the enemy at the battle of Wilderness, on the 6th of May. Together with the Sixth Maine Battery, it was posted in one of the few places accessible to our Artillery, and withstood the shock of the charging columns of Longstreet's Corps, and drove back the enemy with severe loss, using nearly one hundred rounds of canister. The only loss sustained by the Battery in this terrific fighting, was a few horses killed and disabled. On the 8th, it marched to the Po River, and was there engaged with the enemy on the 9th, 10th and 11th instants. At this battle one officer and two men were severely wounded, and others slightly injured. Four or five horses were here killed or disabled. At Spottsylvania, the New Hampshire Battery again engaged in battle, fighting on the 14th and 18th of May, without loss. On the 23d, it marched to the North Anna River, and supported the advance of Birney's Division, which succeeded in carrying the Bridge and in effecting a crossing. On the following day, the Battery crossed the River and remained until the withdrawal of the Corps on the 26th. On the morning of the 27th, the Union forces moved southward, and on the 28th crossed the Pamunkey River and took position at Sheldon's Cross Roads. The Battery fought here on the 30th and 31st of May, and on the 1st of June; moved from thence to Cold Harbor and fought again on the 3d and 5th, having two men wounded and two horses killed. It left Cold Harbor on the 12th of June, crossed the James River on the 15th, and on the 16th arrived before Petersburg, where it was immediately placed in position for battle. During this and the succeeding four days it was sharply engaged with the enemy, having two men severely wounded. On the 20th, the Battery was relieved from duty at the front, and placed in reserve. Up to June 30th, in the campaign of that year, it had marched one hundred and fifty miles, and been eighteen days engaged in action with the enemy.

During the month of July, 1864, the Battery remained in front of Petersburg, occupying different positions on the line, without any serious fighting until the 26th, when it took part with Hancock's Corps in the rapid movement across the Appomattox and James Rivers to Deep Bottom. Here, early on the morning of the 27th, an action commenced and the Battery was soon ordered to take position and engage a battery of the enemy, which was greatly annoying our troops. This order was promptly obeyed, and in less than thirty minutes the hostile battery was completely silenced, its men driven from their guns, and one of his limbers exploded. The only loss to the New Hampshire Battery was two horses killed, and a caisson disabled by the enemy's shot. On the night of the 29th, the Union command withdrew across the James River, and early on the morning of the 30th, were again in front of Petersburg, and ready to take part in the assault of that day, having marched over twenty miles during the previous night. Nothing further of interest occurred to this organization until the 12th of August, when it was again put in motion towards Deep Bottom. On arriving at Jones' Neck, it was placed in reserve, and consequently did not take part in the action which occurred here. On the 20th, it returned to Petersburg. The following day the Battery was placed in Fort Morton, nearly opposite the centre of the mine which exploded on the 30th of July, and remained in this position until the 30th of August, being almost every day engaged with the enemy. During this time it lost one man killed and two severely wounded by the enemy's sharp-shooters. On the night of August 30th, it was withdrawn from Fort Morton and placed in Fort Hell, where it remained till the 7th of September. On the 24th of this month it was again placed on the front line in Battery No. 13, where it remained until the 22d of October, being almost constantly engaged with the enemy. At this time it was withdrawn from the front and was in reserve during the remainder of the month. From July 1, 1864, up to this date, the Battery had been twenty days engaged with the enemy. On the 25th of September, its original term of enlistment expired, and fifty-nine men of the original number, who had not reënlisted, were mustered out of service. Four officers were also mustered out at the same time. The requisite number of men remained for a four-gun battery, but on the 5th of November following, by an order from the War Department, this organization was transferred to the First Regiment of New Hampshire Heavy Artillery, with the designation of Battery "M," but guaranteed to remain detached as a Light Battery in the field. Thus, with a noble record, covering over three years of faithful and distinguished services to the Nation, the First New Hampshire Light Battery, as an independent organization, passed out of existence; but the recollection of its noble career will be proudly cherished so long as we have a Government to love and to live for.

FIRST HEAVY ARTILLERY.

[The following history was furnished by John C. Jenness, First Lieutenant and Adjutant First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery.]

On the 17th of April, 1863, Lieut. Col. Charles H. Long of the Seventeenth New Hampshire Infantry—which regiment was not mustered into the United States service—was commissioned as Captain of the 1st Company (unattached) Heavy Artillery New Hampshire Volunteers, to be raised under special authority of the War Department for a garrison of the defences of Portsmouth Harbor. The organization having been completed the company was mustered into service on the 22d of July, 1863, and stationed at Fort Constitution.

On the 18th of August, 1863, Ira McL. Barton, formerly of the Fifth Infantry, was commissioned Captain of the 2d Company (unattached) Heavy Artillery, raised under similar authority for similar purposes as the first. This organization was completed and mustered into service on the 17th of September, 1863. It was stationed at Fort McClary Kittery Point.

They remained at their respective posts during the Fall and Winter doing the ordinary garrison duty and furnishing the guard for the Provost Marshal of the first district. In addition to this they made many improvements at their respective posts, building a long set of quarters at Fort Constitution; while the company at McClary, upon the Quartermaster's simply purchasing the material at the Portsmouth Lumber Yards, built without any assistance, one of the finest hospitals belonging to the United States on the New England coast.

On the 6th of May, 1864, both companies proceeded under orders from Major General Dix to report to Gen. C. C. Augur, commanding Department of Washington, where they duly arrived and were assigned for duty in the Defences of Washington.

The Government were about sending the heavy garrisons of the Defences to the front and these companies were employed to relieve them. In the course of ten days they relieved nearly thirty-five hundred men.

Company A furnished men for garrison duty at Forts Slocum, Stevens, Totten, Slemmer, and Batteries Parrott, Cameron, Kemball and Vermont. Company B was, in ten days, sent as a relieving and occupying force into ten different Forts, among them Forts Bunker Hill, Saratoga, Lincoln, Bayard, Gaines and Fort Foote, at which last important work they were stationed as a permanent garrison. Company A was retained in the defences north of the city and assisted in defeating Early in his attack, or rather, raid on Washington—Capt. Long being in command of a Provisional Battalion of four hundred men. At this time the duties of these companies were very arduous, and there being but few troops in the defences, they were continually on duty both night and day.

Early in August, 1864, Capt. Ira McL. Barton made an application to the Secretary of War, through His Excellency Joseph A. Gilmore Governor of New Hampshire, to recruit a battalion of at least four companies of Heavy Artillery. His Excellency favorably endorsed the measure and the application was granted by the following:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
August 19th, 1864.

To His Excellency the Governor of New Hampshire, Concord, N. H.

SIR:—You are hereby authorized by the Secretary of War to raise a Battalion of Heavy Artillery, to consist of four companies for garrison service. The term of service will be for either one, two or three years, as the recruit may elect. The recruitment, organization and muster into service will be in uniformity with the requirements of existing regulations of the War Department. Bounties will be paid in accordance with circular No. 27, Current Laws, from the office of the Provost Marshal General of the United States.

I am, Sir, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,

(Signed,) THOMAS M. VINCENT.
Assistant Adjutant General.

Recruiting in New Hampshire commenced at once and men came rapidly forward. On the 3d of August, 1864, Capt. Barton by Special Orders No. 287, War Department, was placed on the recruiting service, and returning to New Hampshire took charge of the organization of the companies under Adjutant General

Head. Previous to the granting of authority for raising this battalion, authority had been given to raise the 3d Company (unattached) Heavy Artillery, which was done by Capt. J. O. Chandler at Manchester.

The four companies of the battalion were quickly raised as follows: At Dover, by Capt. Geo. W. Colbath; at Concord, by Capt. R. S. Davis; at Nashua, by Capt. D. J. Flanders; at Laconia and vicinity, by Capt. A. S. Libbey. Recruits came in so rapidly that the authorized companies were more than filled, and Adjutant General Head applied for and obtained authority for the Governor to organize other companies. One was raised at Newport; Capt. C. C. Shattuck—another at Lancaster—Capt. Chas. O. Bradley, and one at Ft. Constitution (from a ninety days company;) Capt. C. C. Haughton and one company with general recruits at Concord commanded by Capt. R. E. Welch.

The companies as soon as organized were sent forward to Washington where they were assigned to duty under the direction of Major General Augur. Ten companies of Heavy Artillery having been organized, and the eleventh nearly so, upon an application made by General Head for the Governor, the following despatch was received:

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20th, 1864.

Governor of New Hampshire:—This is authority from the Secretary of War to give to your Heavy Artillery companies a Regimental Organization, Field Officers to be appointed and mustered under existing regulations.

(Signed,) T. M. VINCENT.

Assistant Adjutant General.

Under this authority, the Governor on the 29th of September, appointed the field officer for this organization. Lieut. Colonel Barton was immediately mustered, and Col. Long was ordered to New Hampshire to relieve him and complete the organization of the regiment.

The different batteries as they were forwarded met with different assignments, but finally seven of the companies were collected in the Third Brigade, DeRussy's Division. By order of authority from the War Department already received, and from Headquarters Department of Washington, the regiment was organized, and Lieut. Col. Barton assumed command Oct. 21, 1864.

On the 9th of November, it being found impossible to form the 12th Company, the First New Hampshire Light Battery was assigned to the regiment and Col. Long was mustered. On the 16th of November, he assumed command of the regiment.

On the 21st of November, 1864, Col. Long was assigned to the command of the First Brigade Hardin's Division 22d Army Corps, in which Batteries A and L were then stationed. On the 27th of November, Lieut. Col. Barton was relieved from the command of the Third Brigade of DeRussy's Division, and ordered to report with the seven companies of the regiment to Col. Long to be assigned to duty in his brigade. Col. Long being in command of a brigade, the command of the regiment again devolved upon Lieut. Col. Barton.

On the 25th of November, Battery A was relieved from duty in the department and ordered to Portsmouth Harbor, and in the following February, Battery B was also ordered for duty at the same place.

During the Winter, and until the muster-out of the regiment it garrisoned a line of works some ten miles in extent, where it gained great proficiency in artillery drill. About fifty men were detailed each day for picket duty in front of this long line of fortifications. Although the duty of the Regiment was confined principally to garrisons, it was nevertheless arduous and disagreeable.

On the 15th of June, 1865, the regiment was mustered out of service, and on the 16th, was en route for New Hampshire, where it arrived on the 19th.

The history of this regiment is necessarily short and not of striking interest. It is but justice, however, to the officers and men, to say that they came forward at a time when their services seemed to be most urgently required. Nine tenths of the enlisted men of the regiment had seen from one to three years active service before entering this organization, and of the officers there were but two who had not seen active service in the field.

SHARPSHOOTERS.

The three companies of Sharpshooters which New Hampshire furnished for the military service of the United States have received less than their due share of notice. This has doubtless been owing in a great measure to the fact that they were unconnected with any State organization. Their history has been merged in that of the regiments of which they formed a part; and as these belonged neither to any particular State, nor to the regular service, their efficiency and their fame have rested wholly on the efforts of Col. Berdan, their founder, with the officers who assisted him, and the men who have written their military history in bloody characters on almost every battle-field in Virginia and Maryland.

The principle of the organization was, at least in this country, a new one. Its cardinal points were good weapons and skill in using them. Rifled cannon and minnie bullets had in a great measure superseded smooth-bore ordnance and buck and ball. Switzerland had long had her Sharpshooters, and both England and Continental Europe had opened schools of instruction in rifle practice. When our war broke out we had nothing similar to this. Theoretically, it was easy to supply this want. Our eastern forests and western prairies abounded in men skilled in the use of the rifle, and their habits of life rendered them fit material for a rifle corps. They were hardy men, accustomed to exposure, steady of nerve, loyal to the core, and only wanted proper arms and proper organization to make them an invaluable addition to our raw levies in other arms of the service. Practically, the task was a difficult one. Few States, if any, could furnish material for a regiment or a battallion even. Hence the powerful agency of State influence was lost. The idea of the corps was a novel one, and many obstacles hindered the enterprise. Proper arms could not be procured, and Government was so busy in developing its resources in "regular channels," that it could afford no time for experiments on untried theories.

These were but a few of the difficulties, and it was only by the most untiring energy and perseverance that they were overcome, and Col. Berdan procured a reluctant permission to raise a force of Sharpshooters, and received a promise that two thousand Sharpe's rifles should be manufactured for them. It is not necessary that the difficulties encountered in procuring the fulfillment of these promises should be stated here. The result was, the First and Second Regiments of United States Sharpshooters, commonly known as Berdan's Sharpshooters, of which the three companies from New Hampshire formed a part.

Their record has no superior. The men were selected by the following test prescribed by the War Department: Each man was to make a string of ten shots, measuring, in the aggregate, from center of bull's-eye to center of ball, not more than fifty inches, at a distance of one hundred yards off-hand, or two hundred yards at a rest. This was the maximum; but the strings of the first company varied from seven to thirty inches. The uniform of the corps was a dark green, with gutta-percha United States buttons and gutta-percha belt-plates. The drill was that of common Light Infantry, with particular attention given to skirmish drill and target practice. The arms were Sharpe's improved breech-loading rifles, with set-triggers, and a small per centage of heavy target rifles, with telescopic sights. The regiments were used some times together as skirmishers, and once or twice in line of battle, but more commonly by detachments to any portion of the army where skilful skirmishing, sharpshooting or strong picket duty was to be done. As skirmishers, they had confessedly no equals, and their preëminence was due to their superior weapons, skill and drill. Wherever the picket fire of the enemy became too warm, a detachment of Sharpshooters was sent and rarely failed to stop it. Wherever a hostile battery could be reached by a rifle-ball, their heavy guns and sure aim rendered continuous use impossible. Wherever a reconnoissance was to be made, the "green coats" were called upon to clear the way; and wherever an important picket line was to be established or re-established, the facility which the Sharpshooters possessed in loading and firing their breech-loading rifles rendered them the willing recipients of orders to perform the difficult task. They participated in more battles and skirmishes than the average of regiments, and probably killed more rebels than the same number of troops in any other arm of the service; while from their having been seldom used in line of battle in dense masses, they suffered less loss in comparison than many other regiments.

COMPANY E.

The first company of New Hampshire Sharpshooters contained some of the best rifle-shots in the State, and it has not been surpassed by any company of New Hampshire troops in either the moral or physical qualifications of its members. Many more applied for admission to its ranks than could be taken. It was mustered into the service of the United States on the 9th of September, 1861, and on the 11th instant left for Weehawken, N. J., the rendezvous of the regiment. It was a few days afterward ordered to the Camp of Instruction established by Col. Berdan, north of the city of Washington, D. C., near Seventh street, and was assigned to the First Regiment United States Sharpshooters as Company E. It was at first supplied with target rifles purchased by the men, the price of which was afterwards allowed them by the Government. They had been in camp but a few days, when Capt. Jones was ordered with his company and a Michigan company from his regiment, to take part in a foraging movement toward Falls Church, on the south side of the Potomac, under the command of Gen. W. F. Smith. It was there they received their first experience under fire, and on this march had their first man (Sergt. Brooks,) wounded. They spent the winter of '61 and '62 at Camp of Instruction in drilling and target practice. Meanwhile so favorable an impression was made by the first company, that Col. Berdan requested Gov. Berry to raise two more companies, and when they were full, Capt. Jones received a commission as Major of the Second Regiment United States Sharpshooters, to which the new companies were assigned.

Just before the army of the Potomac was ordered to the Peninsula, the First Regiment United States Sharpshooters was assigned, without being brigaded, to Fitz John Porter's Division, with which it made its first campaign. On the 9th of March the Division in two columns made a reconnoissance toward Big Bethel, half of the Sharpshooters skirmishing in advance of each column.

The only enemy found were a few cavalry scouts, one of whom was shot from his horse at a distance of about thirteen hundred yards, by private James Morse, of Company E. This was the first man shot on either side in the peninsula campaign.

On the 4th of April the company, with the rest of the regiment, took the advance of the 5th Corps on the march to Yorktown, being deployed as skirmishers wherever the enemy appeared, and on the 5th of April they distinguished themselves in the first battle of the campaign, crawling up near the enemy's works and with their target rifles picking off the rebel gunners so surely as to render their batteries nearly useless. It was in this engagement that the company lost its first man killed, private J. S. M. Ide, of Claremont. During the long siege of Yorktown which succeeded, the Sharpshooters were kept constantly at work, and were almost wholly relied on to keep the enemy from molesting our working parties, and the value of their service was recognized by Gen. Porter in a special complimentary order. They could have found no better opportunity for displaying the utility of the organization, and they fully demonstrated the wisdom of the principles on which they were founded.

From Yorktown after its capture on the 5th of May, they proceeded by water to West Point, where they received their Sharpe's rifles in accordance with the original plan, as the target guns were found too cumbersome and too difficult to be loaded for facility in marching and skirmishing. On arriving at the Chickahominy, they were kept constantly on picket duty, oftentimes standing all day in mud and water, and a great part of the time under a hot fire. On the 27th of May they made a forced march of fifteen miles in a heavy rain and took part in the battle of Hanover Court House. They accompanied Porter's Corps through the famous seven days' fight, losing heavily in the battles of Mechanicsville, Gaines' Mill and Malvern Hill, at which place last mentioned 2d Lieut. C. E. Jones was wounded and taken prisoner, and soon afterwards died. He was a brave man and a true soldier.

From Harrison's Landing, on the 14th of August the company marched to Newport News, embarked for Acquia Creek, and thence marched to the battle ground of Gainesville and second Bull Run, suffering considerable loss in killed and wounded, among the latter of whom was Capt. W. P. Austin, his arm severely shattered. During the movement from Harrison's Landing, 1st Lieut. W. H. Gibbs was acting Quartermaster of the regiment.

The company afterwards marched to Antietam, where they formed a part of the reserve under Gen. Porter, and took no active part in the battle. A few days afterwards, on the 19th of September, they skirmished across the Potomac, drove the rebels, and captured several pieces of artillery, in a sharp little engagement known as Blackford's Ford. Accompanying the army on the march to Fredericksburg, they took part in the terrible battle at that place on the 13th of December, and were the last troops withdrawn across the river after the attack was abandoned. They afterwards went on the famous reconnoissance known as Burnside's "mud march."

Early in January, 1863, the two regiments of Sharpshooters were brought together in one command, under Col. Berdan, and separate detachments were put upon duty at the several Grand Division Head Quarters, Company E being at those of Major-General Hooker. As soon, however, as Gen. Hooker assumed command of the army of the Potomac, Grand Divisions were abolished and the two regiments were assigned to the third Division, third Army Corps, commanded by Gen. Whipple, and for a time formed a brigade by themselves, under Col. Berdan. While thus organized, they took part in the great battle of Chancellorsville, where they greatly distinguished themselves, first in the engagement known as "The Cedars," where they took the entire Twenty-Third Georgia Regiment prisoners, and afterwards in the great battle of Sunday, May 3, where they suffered heavily.

After their return to camp, just before the movement to Pennsylvania, June 11, the third Division was broken up, and the two regiments of Sharpshooters were assigned to the Second brigade, First Division of the Third Corps, Col. Berdan still retaining command, except for a few days preceding the battle of Gettysburg, and the first day of the battle, when the Sharpshooters reported directly to Division Head Quarters. During the three days' battle, they were almost constantly engaged, and contributed their full share towards that victory which saved Washington from capture.

From Gettysburg they marched in pursuit of Lee, and bore the brunt of the sharp fight of Wapping Heights, where their splendid skill in skirmishing, their coolness, and the deliberation and accuracy of their aim won great praise from Gen. Meade and Gen. French, who were eye-witnesses of their movements. They were afterwards encamped at White Sulphur Springs and Culpepper, until the movement of Lee, which forced Meade back to Centreville, during which movement they distinguished themselves in a charge at Auburn, Oct. 13, which drew a special complimentary order from the Corps commander. On the subsequent march of the army to its winter quarters near Brandy Station, the Sharpshooters led the third Corps and added to their already enviable reputation in a severe skirmish at Kelly's Ford, Nov. 3, in which they drove the enemy across the Rappahannock, captured a large number of prisoners, and gained a lodgment for our forces on the other side of the river. In this engagement, Sergeant Samuel D. Munroe, who had been commissioned as first Lieutenant of this company, but had not been mustered, was instantly killed while directing a portion of the skirmish line. Lieut. Munroe was a brave and excellent soldier, who had worked his way up from the ranks, and was highly esteemed by all his company. November 27 and 28, the company also took an active part in the severe battles at Locust Grove and Mine Run, where they suffered considerable loss.

During the winter of 1863 and '64, the Third Army Corps was broken up and the Sharpshooters were assigned to the 3d Brigade, 3d Division, 2d Army Corps, Gen. Hancock commanding, with Brigadier-Gen. Alexander Hayes as brigade commander. With this brigade they went through the bloody campaign of the summer of 1864, under fire almost without cessation every day from the 5th of May until they were mustered out of service, and during which campaign Captain W. G. Andrews and 1st Lieut. Isaac Davis were both wounded.

It will be seen from the facts given above that the services of this Company were arduous, and their reputation honorable. A roster of the officers will be found in another page of this report. The following officers have been furnished to other commands from this Company.

Capt. A. B. Jones was commissioned Major of the Second Regiment U. S. Sharpshooters on the 3d of December, 1861, and in May, 1862, received a staff appointment with the rank of Colonel, and has since served on the staffs of Generals Fremont, Schenck, Scammon and others.

First Lieutenant, afterwards Capt. W. P. Austin, was disabled by his wound received August 30, 1862, and was transferred to the Veteran Reserve Corps.

Second Lieutenant, afterwards first Lieut. W. H. Gibbs, was appointed Captain of a Michigan Company in his regiment, but was refused a commission on the ground that he was not a resident of the State. He afterwards was tendered a staff appointment with the rank of Major on the staff of Major-General Banks, but was unable to accept on account of ill health.

Private Frank P. Cram was promoted to Sergeant-Major of his regiment and afterwards commissioned as 2d Lieutenant, Company — , First New Hampshire Cavalry.

The following names of battles and skirmishes in which Company E participated, were inscribed on the Regimental battle-flag by order of the various corps commanders under which the Sharpshooters served:

COMPANIES F AND G.

As these companies formed a part of the same regiment, and were always used together, their history may as well be connected. Company F was mustered into United States service November 28, 1861, with ninety-eight men and three officers. Company G was mustered December 10, 1861, with ninety-five men and three officers. Each company left for Washington as soon as mustered, and reported to Colonel Berdan at Camp of Instruction, where they were assigned to the Second Regiment United States Sharpshooters. On the 18th of March, the regiment was assigned to the Brigade of General Augur, 1st Division, 1st Corps, and joined his command at Camp Williams, near Fairfax Seminary. On the 1st of April they marched to Bristoe Station, and on the 15th of the same month to Falmouth, where they met the enemy for the first time, and in a sharp skirmish drove them across the Rappahannock. While at Falmouth, Co. F was put upon provost duty. On the 29th of May the Division moved to Front Royal on the Manassas Gap Railroad, at the time of Banks' retreat to Harper's Ferry, and during this trip the regiment lost one man killed and about sixty wounded by a collision of trains on the railroad. About the middle of June, they returned to Falmouth. On the 12th of July, Capt. H. M. Caldwell, Company F, died of typhoid fever, and the service thus lost a brave, patriotic and promising officer. First Lieutenant J. H. Hildreth was here detailed as Aide to General Gibbon, and the command of the company devolved on Lieutenant Rowell. On the 1st of August this regiment went on a reconnoissance to Orange Court House, taking part in a lively skirmish with the enemy. August 10th they marched to Cedar Mountain and thence to Rappahannock Station, where there was a sharp engagement on the 23d of August, and Company F had its first man wounded, Sergeant J. P. Dodge of New Boston. Directly after this in the disastrous campaign of General Pope, the two companies bore an honorable part in the battles of Sulphur Springs, Gainesville and Bull Run. They then marched with McClellan, and won great praise from their commanding officers at the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, where they suffered heavy losses. Among the killed was 2d Lieutenant J. W. Thompson, Company G, who was shot through the head while attempting to capture a stand of rebel colors. Lieutenant Thompson had served as 2d Lieutenant in the First New Hampshire Regiment, and was a thorough soldier, whose greatest fault was too reckless bravery.

The Regiment accompanied the 1st Corps on the march to Fredericksburg, and was hotly engaged on the 13th of December at that place under General Franklin. As stated in the report of Company E, the two regiments of Sharpshooters were brought together in one Brigade early in January, 1863. They kept thus organized during the summer campaign, including the battles of Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and Wapping Heights, in which companies F and G were engaged, and in the second of which, Captain Rowell was wounded in the thigh. On arriving at Sulphur Springs, the First Regiment was transferred to the 3d Brigade, while the Second remained with General Ward's Brigade until the close of the year covered by this report, taking part in the battles of Kelley's Ford, Locust Grove, Mine River, and encamped during the winter at Brandy Station. In January, 1864, more than two thirds of each company re-enlisted and the regiment became a Veteran Regiment, and received a furlough and did not return to the front until after the spring election.

Their history during the bloody campaign of 1864, is mainly like that of the 1st Company. They were used mostly as skirmishers and Sharpshooters and were almost constantly under fire. From the time of the consolidation of the two regiments, Jan. 1863, they participated in the same battles and skirmishes, the names of which will be found at the end of the report of Company E. The names of their engagements previous to this time, are as follows:

Falmouth, May 15, 1862.
Rappahannock Station, August 23, 1862.
Sulphur Spring, August 25, 1862.
Gainesville, August 29, 1862.
Bull Run, August 30, 1862.
South Mountain, September 14, 1862.
Antietam, September 17, 1862.
Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862.

During the summer campaign of 1864, Major E. T. Rowell was wounded severely at the battle of Petersburg while gallantly leading his regiment, and he has never fully recovered from his injuries. Captain Samuel F. Murray, Company F, was taken prisoner at the battle of Ream's Station and was kept a prisoner for a long time. Captain H. P. Smith, Company G, was severely wounded at the battle of the Wilderness.

The two companies have furnished the following officers for commands outside their companies. Second Lieutenant E. T. Rowell, Company F, was promoted to Captain July 12, 1862, and was commissioned as Major of his regiment on the 1st of July, 1863. He was afterwards commissioned as Lieut-Colonel, but the number of his regiment was too small to admit of his being mustered. During the campaign of 1864, the two regiments of Sharpshooters were brought together again and reported as a separate brigade direct to Division Headquarters. While thus organized the two regiments were commanded by Major Rowell.

First Lieutenant J. H. Hildreth, Company F, served nearly all of his term of service on the staff of Major-Gen. Gibbon.

Sergeant W. B. Reynolds, Company F, was commissioned as Assistant Surgeon of his regiment soon after its organization, and was promoted to full Surgeon, with the rank of Major, August 12, 1863.

Private Charles B. Wilson was commissioned as 2d Lieutenant in the Nineteenth United States Colored Regiment in the fall of 1864.

Sergeant George A. Marden, Company G, was commissioned as 1st Lieutenant and Quartermaster of the First Regiment United States Sharpshooters, July 10, 1862. On the 1st of January, 1863, he was detailed as Acting-Assistant Adjutant-General of the Brigade in which his regiment was serving, in which capacity he acted until August 10, 1863, when he was sent on detached service to New York.

This Band was organized by Gustavus W. Ingalls, Concord, N. H., February 10, 1863, pursuant to instructions from Adjutant General's Office, Washington, D. C., December 12, 1862, and proceeded South, and was adopted as Post Band, and attached to Head Quarters Department of the South, Hilton Head, South Carolina, where it remained until it was discharged, July 4, 1865.

It accompanied General Gillmore to Morris Island, South Carolina, and was present during the seige of Forts Sumpter and Wagner, and was the first to play inside the Fort and in the city of Charleston after the evacuation, and had the honor of a special appointment to perform at the Sumpter celebration, April 14, 1865.

The Band accompanied the Commanding Generals on all important occasions to different points in the Department, and always sustained a high reputation.

Major-General Terry, in a letter dated Richmond, Va., June 24, 1865, remarks as follows: "The Post Band, Hilton Head, South Carolina, is one of the finest Bands I ever heard in the army"—

The following extract of letter written by Major W. L. M. Burger, Assistant Adjutant General Department of the South, at the time of the departure of the Band for home, will convey an idea of the manner in which the services of the Band was estimated, in the Department in which it served:

"HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH,
ASSISTANT ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Hilton Head, S. C., July 7, 1865.

MR. GUSTAVUS W. INGALLS, CONCORD, N. H.—

MY DEAR SIR:

* * * * * * *

"I can assure you that since I have had anything to do with the Band, of which you had the honor of being the leader, I never have had occasion to say one word in regard to any of its members, but that of the highest praise. Every member has conducted himself in the most gentlemanly and praiseworthy manner; never to my knowledge has any one abused any of the privileges extended to them. I can assure you that you and every member of your Band stand in the highest estimation of every one in this Department, from Major-General Gillmore down. Your loss is deeply regretted, and by none more than myself. We never expect to see such another, as "Ingalls' Post Band," here again."

I remain as ever, your friend,

W. T. M. BURGER,

Major and Assistant Adjutant General.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Lieut.-Col. Josiah I. Plimpton, Third Volunteer Infantry.

Lieut.-Col. Josiah I. Plimpton was born in West Cambridge, Massachusetts, December 27, 1825. At the age of nine years he was left fatherless, at which time his mother removed to Boston, where he attended school for several years, and afterwards learned the trade of a cabinet maker with especial reference to the art of finishing piano-fortes. He devoted himself to this occupation for about twelve years, with the exception of two years passed in California. In 1857 he purchased a farm on the Souhegan River, in Milford, this State, and removed thence with his family. Here he resided engaged mostly in agricultural pursuits until the commencement of hostilities.

When President Lincoln made his first proclamation for troops, Lieut.-Col. Plimpton, then a private citizen, immediately volunteered his services to his country and was appointed a recruiting officer by the State authorities. He soon raised a full company of efficient men who were assigned to the Third Regiment under the title of Company E. On the 22d of August, 1861, he was commissioned Captain of his company.

On the 4th of September, the Third Regiment left Concord for Washington from whence it soon afterwards joined the forces of Gen. Sherman on the expedition to Port Royal. On arriving at Hilton Head, Capt. Plimpton and his company were among the first troops to land and go on picket duty. At the bloody conflict on James Island on the 16th of June, he was acting Major of the regiment and exhibited marked bravery and heroism. For his distinguished services in this battle he was highly commended by his superior officers while his conduct was even noticed by the enemy and by them afterwards complimented under a flag of truce. A few days after this memorable action Capt. Plimpton was commissioned Major of his regiment.

In October he engaged in the battle of Pocotaligo Bridge where he fully sustained the reputation he had previously gained. Subsequently he was assigned to duty on Brig.-Gen. Strong's Staff as Assistant Inspector General and served with this officer in the capture of Morris Island and in the assault upon Fort Wagner.

Soon afterwards he received the appointment of Inspector General upon the Staff of Gen. Terry, by which officer he was commended for the prompt and efficient discharge of his duties.

On the 6th of April, 1864, Major Plimpton was commissioned Lieutenant Colonel of his regiment, and immediately entered upon command, as Col. Jackson had resigned, and Lieut.-Colonel John Bedell was a prisoner of war.

After joining in an expedition southward as far as Florida, the Third New Hampshire Volunteers were ordered to the Department of Gen. Butler, in Virginia, where they took an active and conspicuous part in many of the battles before Richmond and Petersburg. Lieut.-Col. Plimpton was at that time in command of the regiment and led his brave men in the gallant attack upon Drury's Bluff, in the charge upon the enemy at Manchester Heights, and also in recapturing the rifle-pits at Bermuda Hundred.

On the 13th of August, the regiment was ordered to the north side of the James River, and on the 16th instant, joined in the attack upon the enemy at Deep Run. The rebel works at Flussel's Mills were captured and many prisoners taken. The Union troops then advanced about three hundred yards beyond the captured line and made a desperate charge through an open field, but on account of the secure position of the enemy and his overwhelming numbers our brave men were obliged to fall back. Just as the order was given to retreat Lieut.-Col. Plimpton was shot through the heart and almost instantly killed. At the moment he fell he was in the most advanced position of our forces and was actively engaged in moving his command in order and in rallying and in encouraging his men. The body of the deceased officer fell into the hands of the enemy, but was returned the next day under a flag of truce. It was subsequently taken back to Jones' Landing and there buried on the north bank of the James River. In the following December, the regiment had the remains disinterred and sent home to a bereaved wife and children. The last funeral rites were performed at Milford on the 5th of January, last. The exercises where held in the Congregational Church, which was filled to repletion by kindred, friends and citizens. At the conclusion of the church services the remains were given in charge to the Masonic Fraternity, of which organization the deceased was an honored associate, and by the brethren of the "mystic tie" were consigned to their final resting-place.

Col. Louis Bell, Fourth Volunteer Infantry.

Col. Louis Bell was born in Chester, New Hampshire, on the 8th of March, 1837. He fitted for college at the academy in Derry, this State, and graduated at Brown University in Providence, Rhode Island, in 1853. While at college he distinguished himself by his attainments in chemistry and by his proficiency in the natural sciences generally. After his graduation he read law at Charlestown and Manchester, and commenced practice in Farmington, where he was located at the opening of the war. In 1860 he was the Solicitor for Strafford County.

In April, 1861, he was offered and accepted the command of a company of soldiers raised in the city of Dover, and which entered the First New Hampshire Regiment of Infantry. On the 30th instant, he was commissioned as Captain and served during the three months campaign of this organization. Returning home in August, he was soon after appointed Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fourth Regiment of Volunteer Infantry, and was promoted to the Colonelcy of the same organization on the 16th of May, 1862.

For some time Col. Bell was in the Department of the South, where he served under Gen. Sherman for several months, as Inspector General, proving himself very efficient in this capacity. Subsequently he was commandant of the post of St. Augustine, Fla., for nearly a year. He led his regiment in the fight at Pocotaligo Bridge, and commanded a brigade during the long siege of 1863 on Morris Island, and in front of Forts Wagner and Gregg.

The deceased joined the Army of the Potomac in the spring of 1864, and from that time until his death, he retained the command of a brigade, by each regiment of which he was honored and beloved. He was temporarily entrusted with a division in the Army of the James, in the Deep Bottom fights of last summer, and exhibited conspicuous gallantry at the battle of Chapin's Farm, Va. Col. Bell accompanied Gen. Terry in his expedition to Fort Fisher, and while leading his brigade in the final charge, in the afternoon of Sunday, Jan. 15th, received his death wound from the ball of a sharpshooter on the parapet of the fort, which penetrated his lungs and passed through his body. He lingered until eight the next morning, and while his life was ebbing away he kept his interest in the battle unabated to the last, continually inquiring in intervals of delirium, as to the final result. His promotion as Brevet Brigadier General arrived the day he was wounded, but he died while it was yet unknown to him.

The deceased was a son of the Hon. Samuel Bell, formerly a United States Senator, and also Governor of New Hampshire. He was the youngest of eight brothers, several of whom passed away young, like himself, in the fullness of promise, while others survived to attain well-deserved honors. Among these last were the late Hon. James Bell, Senator of the United States from New Hampshire, and the late Luther V. Bell, M. D., who was well-known as the Superintendent of the McLean Asylum for the Insane, at Charlestown, Mass., and afterwards as a Brigade Surgeon in the Volunteer Army. The only two of this large family now living, are Ex-Chief Justice Samuel Dana Bell, of Manchester, and Dr. John Bell, a Surgeon in the United States Army.

Col. Bell married a daughter of the Rev. N. Bouton, D. D., of Concord, which lady survived the death of her husband only a few months. By the decease of this meritorious officer and his widow, two small children have been made orphans.

In the legal fraternity he was favorably known and possessed great decision, sincerity and uprightness of character. As a soldier he was fearless and accomplished, and was earnestly devoted to the faithful performance of his military duties. Gen Ames in an official report of the capture of Fort Fisher, mentioned Col. Bell with especial commendation as "an able and efficient officer, whose loss will not be easily replaced."

The funeral ceremonies of the deceased took place at Chester, on Tuesday, Jan. 31st, 1865. At the family mansion there were brief religious services, in the presence of relatives and friends, in which the Rev. Dr. Bouton officiated. The body of Col. Bell, dressed in full uniform—his sabre on his breast—reposed in a metallic casket strewed with flowers. Afterwards there were highly appropriate and impressive public religious services at the Congregational Church, which were conducted by Rev. Mr. Tomlinson, Pastor, and Rev. Mr. Thomas, of Laconia, late Chaplain of the Fourth Regiment. At the close of these exercises, a long and sorrowing procession followed the remains of the patriot dead to a grave in the village cemetery, where they were left to mingle with the honored dust of kindred gone before.

Major Charles W. Sawyer, Fourth Volunteer Infantry.

Major Charles W. Sawyer was the eldest son of the Honorable Thomas E. Sawyer, of Dover, and was born on the 19th of May, 1832. Receiving such education as his native city afforded he early entered the business world, where he was distinguished for his industry and fidelity. For a time he was editor of the Cadets' Advocate, a temperance journal, and contributed to its colums many able and interesting articles. This enterprise, not designed to be remunerative, was soon discontinued. Major Sawyer subsequently engaged in mercantile business in Manchester, this State, and in Charlestown and Boston, Mass. During his residence in the latter city he was appointed a clerk in the Boston Post Office and filled the position acceptably until the breaking out of the rebellion. During his residence in Boston he was elected a member of the Board of Superintending School Committee, and in 1860, was chosen a Representative from Ward 7 to the General Court of Massachusetts.

When the startling intelligence came of the firing upon Fort Sumter, Major Sawyer immediately offered his services to Governor Goodwin, of his native State, with a willingness to serve in any capacity where he might render assistance to the Nation in her hour of danger and peril. His proffer was promptly accepted, and he was commissioned as First Lieutenant of Company B, of the First New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry on the 30th of April, 1861, and served honorably with his regiment during its three months campaign.

Mainly through the instrumentality of Major Sawyer Company A, of the Fourth Volunteer Infantry was recruited in the early autumn of 1861, of which company he was commissioned as Captain on the 20th of September, and participated for almost three years in the perils and hardships of his regiment, which was first ordered to Hilton Head, S. C., and which remained in that vicinity and in Florida until the spring of 1863. During this time Major Sawyer was in command of his company excepting when detailed as Judge Advocate of the Military Department at Hilton Head. The Commanding General knowing the ready talent and the fidelity with which the deceased invariably discharged the duties of the above position, generally selected him for the important and often delicate trust. In the battle of Pocotaligo Bridge in October 1862, he conducted himself with conspicuous coolness and bravery.

Soon after this battle the Commanding General desired Major Sawyer to accept the position of Judge Advocate of the Military Department of the South with the rank of Major, but this he declined, preferring to follow the fortunes of his own organization and win the same rank there. On the 1st day of December, 1863, he was promoted and commisioned by Governor Gilmore as Major of his regiment.

When Gen. Grant assumed command of the combined armies nearly all the New Hampshire troops in South Carolina were ordered to report at Fortress Monroe. The gallant Fourth Re iment was among the number. It was placed under the command of Gen. Butler, and participated in the series of skirmishes and battles which marked the history of the Army of the James, during the memorable campaign of 1864. Gen. Butler had taken an important position on the James River and the enemy were determined to drive him from his well selected ground.

During the obstinate persistence of the forces under Gen. Lee, on the 16th day of May, at Drury's Bluff, Major Sawyer fell severely wounded in the right shoulder. He was removed to the General Hospital at Fortress Monroe where he received the most assiduous care and attention. The wound at that time though painful was not considered dangerous, and it was thought that the sufferer might with safety return to his native State. The journey home, however, proved to him excessively fatiguing and wearisome, and his increasing weakness compelled frequent delays on the route. Soon after his arrival in New Hampshire his wound proved to be more dangerous than was at first apprehended, and gradually sinking under its effects, he expired at the residence of his brother, in Concord, on the 22d of June, 1864, dying the death of a brave soldier, lamented and beloved. The deceased was buried in his native city under military honors. The universal supension of business, the lengthened procession, the crowded streets, the emblems of mourning, and the tolling bells, gave token of the deep and earnest respect and cordial esteem in which he was held as a citizen and honored as a soldier.

The news of his death was received by his regiment with deep sorrow. Gen. Butler, who appreciated his bravery, soldierly qualities, and virtues as a citizen, named one of the forts on the James River "Fort Sawyer" in recognition of his distinguished services in the field.

As a military man the deceased was a strict disciplinarian, and yet he combined with the firmness of authority such generous considerations, such thoughtful kindness and such heartfelt interest in the welfare of his men, that he invariably won their respect and love. In camp and on the field of battle he was careful of the health and lives of his soldiers, and when sickness and death came to any of them, it found him kind and attentive to all their wants. Throughout the vicissitudes of a long and weary campaign, he cheerfully shared with his men all privations and dangers, and, at last, gave up his life willingly and uncomplainingly in the glorious cause for which he had so long fought and suffered.

Among the many noble traits of character possessed by the deceased none was more prominent than his ardent and devoted patriotism. His country—her territorial dignity, her unity, her flag and her glory—these he loved with an enthusiasm and chivalric warmth which thought no sacrifice too great for their preservation.

Although Major Sawyer was cut off in the full vigor of manhood yet his short career afforded a bright example of sincere patriotism and of fidelity to the Nation and the Flag.

Col. Edward Ephraim Cross, Fifth Volunteer Infantry.

Among the many brave officers who gave up their lives for their country on the bloody field of Gettysburg, was Col. Edward Ephraim Cross, who was born in Lancaster, New Hampshire, on the 22d of April, 1832. His father, the Hon. Ephraim Cross, was formerly a State Senator; while his mother is a daughter of the late Hon. Richard C. Everett, of Lancaster, who had been an Associate Justice of the Court of Common Pleas. Having enjoyed the educational privileges of the public schools and an academy. Col. Cross, at the age of fifteen years, entered the printing-office of Hon. James M. Rix, who was then the editor and publisher of the Coös County Democrat. After remaining with Mr. Rix for two years, he went to Canada, where his father was engaged in steamboat-building, and assisted him for a while in his labors, and afterwards visited the cities and other places of interest in British America. When twenty years of age, he repaired to Cincinnati, Ohio, and was for a time employed as a reporter in the Atlas office. He afterwards accepted the position of local editor of the Cincinnati Daily Times, and was its special correspondent at Washington during two sessions of Congress. At this time he was also a valued correspondent of the New York Herald, and of other influential journals. Subsequently he became chief-editor of the Cincinnati Times, in which position he displayed very marked ability as a writer. While sojourning at the national Capital, he was appointed Adjutant of an Ohio Regiment of Infantry raised for service in Utah; the organization, however, by reason of a new disposition of forces, was not mustered into service. In 1857 the deceased travelled extensively in the Unied States and the Canadas and contributed a series of brilliant and interesting letters to the newspaper press.

At a later date Col. Cross journeyed to the "Plains" of the far West, to the wild Indian regions of northern Minnesota and also to the country of the Yellow Medicine river and the Upper Missouri. While visiting the latter places, he was associated with a party of trappers and buffalo hunters. Their adventures, aside from the pursuit of fur-bearing animals, were interspersed with several encounters with the Sioux and Cheyenne Indians. During these travels, Col. Cross, in addition to newspaper correspondence, prepared many illustrated articles upon travel for popular magazines. Prose sketches and gems of poetry also came from his pen, over the signature of "Richard Everett." His writings were admired by a large circle of readers. In 1858 the deceased started with a small party for Arizona, having in view the establishment of a mining company in that newly organized territory. The adventurers took with them the first steam engine and printing press transported across the Rocky Mountains. Their journey was seventeen hundred miles in length, extending through northern Texas via El Paso del Norte and La Mesilla, and requiring six months for its accomplishment. A great portion of the way lay through the wild and romantic regions of the Camanche and Apache Indians. These tribes were then very hostile to the whites, and the little company of hardy pioneers were in constant danger of attack. Nearly the entire journey was prosecuted under the most adverse circumstances. At one time Col. Cross, with five of his companions, followed a warlike band of Apaches for fourteen days, two of whom were killed and several wounded. In participating in these skirmishes, the deceased won the reputation of an intrepid Indian scouter and fighter. On one occasion the party were three days without food and thirty hours without water. Finally, rendered almost insane by hunger, they came out on New Year's day at the overland mail station at Apache Pass in Arizonia. The expedition was not successful on account of the limited number of whites in the territory and the frequent inroads of hostile tribes of Indians. A paper was established called the "Arizonian." While editing this sheet, Col. Cross had difficulty with a Lieut. Mowry, and by him was challenged. This "code of honor" for the settlement of personal difficulties was then universally recognized throughout the territories, and Col. Cross, naturally proud of the influence which he had gained among the people of the far West, and fearful of the taunts of cowardice, yielded to the demands of a barbarous custom and accepted the proffered challenge. They fought with rifles at thirty paces. At the first fire Mowry's ball grazed Col. Cross' right cheek, while the ball of the latter passed through the Lieutenant's coat. At the second round, Mowry's rifle missed fire, and he claimed the privilege of shooting at his opponent unarmed. The affair now assumed a most serious character, but Col. Cross, nothing daunted, threw down his weapons and coolly folding his ams stood up to receive the fire of his opponent. Mowry, astonished and impressed at the noble conduct of his adversary, dropped his rifle and exclaimed, "I can't fire at such a man as that." Thus the unfortunate difficulty happily terminated. This event secured for the deceased the reputation of a man of the highest nerve and bravery.

The state of society at Arizonia was at that time devoid of law and order. Lynch courts were of frequent occurrence, and Col. Cross was often summoned to preside over them. His adventurous spirit continuing active, he twice crossed the "Plains" and visited the Atlantic States. He also took out another mining company from St. Louis, Missouri. The withdrawal of the national troops from the territory of Arizonia caused the Indians to become very troublesome, and several expeditions were sent out against them, which Col. Cross invariably commanded. While he was absent on a march against the Apachès, a portion of the tribe attacked the mining company from St. Louis and cruelly murdered nearly every member of the party. While residing in Arizonia the deceased enjoyed the companionship of a large circle of intimate friends. Among those congenial spirits, was Capt. Richard S. Ewell, then of the United States Army, but more recently a Major-General in the rebel service. During his residence in Arizonia, Col. Cross took great pains to examine the country, and collected full and valuable notes of the mineral, physical and vegetable resources of the territory. In this labor he received great assistance from Dr. B. J. Irwin, the United States surgeon at Fort Buchanan, and a naturalist of distinction. The extended notes upon the character and habits of the roving tribes of the "far West" which the deceased faithfully prepared included five vocabularies of Indian tongues. Soon after the destruction of the St. Louis mining company, Col. Cross relinquished his interests in Arizonia, and crossing over the border into Mexico, he accepted from the military authorities of that country the position of a "Chef de Battalion" in the ranks of the Liberal Party. When the "rattling hail" fell on Fort Sumter, he was stationed at El Fuerte in command of a large garrison. He at once resigned his position, proceeded to San Francisco, took passage by a steamer and arrived in New York City on the 18th of August, 1861. Hastening to Concord, New Hampshire, he offered his services to Gov. Berry, and on the 27th of September was commissioned Colonel of the Fifth Regiment of Volunteer Infantry. When announcement of his appointment was made, hundreds of brave men from lake and mountain homes eagerly rallied under his banner, and on the 28th of October Col. Cross bid adieu to his New Hampshire friends and amid great enthusiasm departed with his command for the seat of war. Of the heroic and self-sacrificing deeds performed by this brave officer and his gallant command in many of the contests of the late Secession war, we need not recount at length. His fame as a commander and the glory which gathered about his brave regiment, have made his name a household word in every hamlet in the Granite State; while thousands in other parts of our land have read with patriotic pride of the noble deeds of heroic men who have served faithfully their common country and won new and enduring honors for the home of Stark and Sullivan. The first stand of colors carried by the Fifth Regiment, now dyed with blood and rent with balls, tell the glorious story of Yorktown, Fair Oaks, Savage Station, Peach Orchard, White Oak Swamp, Charles City, Malvern Hill, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg.

Among the superior officers of the army who placed on record their testimony to the distinguished services of Col. Cross and recommended him for promotion, were McClellan, Burnside, Sumner, Casey, Couch, Richardson, Sedgwick, French, Hancock, Hooker, Howard and Caldwell. Gen. Hancock, in a letter to Senator Clark of New Hampshire, dated Falmouth, Va., Dec. 29, 1862, recommending that Col. Cross be promoted to a Brigadier-Generalship, said: "It is unnecessary for me to speak of the deeds of the Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers and their gallant commander; they will form a part of the history of the war." In a communication to Senator Hale of New Hampshire, of the same date, Gen. Hancock remarked: "The conduct of this Regiment has been heroic; in the most important battles it has been highly distinguished. To Col. Cross much of this honor is due; he has faithfully disciplined his Regiment, given it the highest tone, and always led it in battle." One of the most distinguished Generals of the service remarked that, "the Fifth Regiment never changed its position under fire, except towards the enemy." Being senior Colonel of the first brigade of Sumner's division, Col. Cross was often called upon to take command of this brigade in the absence of the ranking officer. He commanded the advance at Manassas and at the battle of the Rappahannock. At the conflict of Fair Oaks his Regiment was among the first to open the battle, and, unaided, drove a portion of the enemy from the woods. His command was also the main force employed to construct the celebrated "Grape-vine Bridge" across the Chickahominy. which, in the language of the Prince de Joinville, "saved the Federal army from destruction." This Regiment was one of those that covered the retreat of our army from Savage's Station to Malvern Hill, and was the last body of men to march from that bloody field. At Antietam Col. Cross' command saved Richardson's division from being outflanked, and, breaking through the ranks of the Fourth North Carolina Volunteers, took many prisoners and captured and bore away their colors. The Fifth Regiment formed the advance at Snicker's Gap, and at Fredericksburg its dead were nearer the enemy's works than those of any other Regiment. Gen. Hancock, in his official report of this battle, remarked, that "the brave officers and men of the Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers refused to yield their ground to the enemy, and many of them died where they stood." After the Fifth Regiment had crossed the Creek on the morning of the battle of Antietam, they were halted by the command of Col. Cross, who addressed them as follows: "Soldiers, the rebel army is in front; the Potomac river is in their rear. We must whip the enemy this day or we shall all be disgraced and ruined. I expect every officer and soldier to do his duty like a man. No one must leave the ranks unless badly wounded. If I fall, leave me on the field until the fight is over. Stand firm, and fire low." Immediately afterwards the Regiment went into battle, and never did soldiers fight with greater courage and bravery. Two pieces of shell struck Col. Cross; one over the right eye, and one on the left cheek, and his hat was knocked off. The wound bled, and he tied a red silk handkerchief around his head and pushed on. Of the terrible fighting which followed when the Fifth Regiment saved Richardson's division from being outflanked, Col. Cross, in a private letter written on the battle-field, spoke as follows: "My brave boys knowing that all depended upon promptly checking the rebels, raised the wild Indian yell and poured an awful volley into their ranks. Their centre regiment was literally smashed to pieces, and before they could rally their forces, several regiments hastened to my assistance. Then came the most terrific fighting. I had been in seven battles before, but they were nothing in comparison with Antietam. We shot down the rebel color-bearers as fast as they could get up, killed their officers, broke their ranks, and piled them in heaps among the tall corn. I never felt better in my life, and if the rebels didn't hear the Apache war-whoop that day, it was not my fault; for I yelled it until I was hoarse. My men fought nobly, gloriously; never wavered, never shrank. Not a man but the wounded and the dead fell out. My officers also conducted themselves like heroes. As for myself, I was hit five times, but not seriously injured."

At the terrible battle of Fredericksburg, the Fifth Regiment greatly distinguished itself. Its commander received wounds which came near being fatal. The following extracts are from a private letter written by Col. Cross and dated, Headquarters, First Brigade, Hancock's Division, June 4, 1863:

* * * "Fredericksburg came near being my last battle. As we were advancing to those fatal heights in line of battle, I was near my colors. A twelve-pounder shell from the Washington battery burst right in front of me. One fragment struck me right below the heart, making a bad wound. Another blew off my hat; another (small bit) entered my mouth and broke out three of my best jaw teeth, while the gravel, bits of frozen earth, and minute fragments of shell, covered my face with bruises. I fell insensible, and lay so for some time, when another fragment of shell, striking me on the left leg below the knee, brought me to my senses. My mouth was full of blood, fragments of teeth and gravel, my breast bone almost broken in, and I lay in mud two inches deep. My brave boys had gone along. I always told them never to stop for me. Dead and wounded lay thick around. One Captain of French's division was gasping in death within a foot of my head. The air was full of hissing bullets and bursting shell. Getting on my hands and knees, I looked for my flag. Thank God, there it fluttered right amid the smoke and fire of the front line. I could hear the cheers of my brave men. Twice the colors dropped, but were up in an instant.

I tried to crawl along, but a shell came and struck the steel scabbard of my sabre, splitting it open and knocking me down flat. Dizzy and faint, I had sense enough to lay myself out decently, "feet to the foe." Two lines passed over me, but soon they swayed back, trampling on the dead and dying. Halting about thirty yards in the rear, one line laid down and commenced firing. Imagine the situation. Right between two fires of bullets and shell—for our own artillery fire from over the river was mostly two short, and did great damage to our own troops—I lay on the field four hours—the most awful moments of my life. As the balls from our line hissed over me within a foot of my head, I covered my face with both hands, and counted rapidly from one to one hundred, expecting, every moment my brains would spatter the ground. But they didn't. My guardian angels (if there be such personages,) or my destiny saved me. The end of my days was reserved for another, and, I hope, more fortunate occasion. For if I am to die on the battle-field, I pray that it may be with the cheers of victory in my ears. When it became dark, some of my men found me, and I was carried to the hospital.

You remember the evening of our little festival. Out of the gay crowd of officers there assembled, death has made a fearful muster. Of the nineteen officers of the Fifth New Hampshire, in the battle, seven were killed and ten wounded! Of the five Colonels of the brigade, three were badly wounded. Only one mounted officer was left in the brigade, which left half its numbers dead and wounded on the field.

Thank Heaven that the old "fire proof" brigade added to its glorious name that day. The same colors that were in the front at Fair Oaks, Malvern Hill and Antietam, were planted nearest to those inaccessible batteries. Out of two hundred and forty-nine of my regiment, one hundred and eighty were killed and wounded. Capt. Perry and Capt. Murray were shot with their colors in their hands. Maj. Sturtevant and Capt. Moore fell within thirty or forty yards of that stone wall at the foot of the hill. But I have no heart to go over the details. The scenes of that battle added ten years to my existence.

I suppose we are now in summer quarters. * * The enemy are very strong in front of us. I want to fight this thing out. My life—all I have—is at the service of my country."

In the battle of Gettysburg, Col. Cross received his death wound. His conduct on that fiercely contested field was a thrilling example of sublime bravery and heroism. Here, as in many previous instances, he was on duty as an Acting Brigadier General. His force was the first brigade of the first division of the second Army Corps, the command which so gallantly repulsed the repeated charges of the rebels. At half-past six in the afternoon of Thursday, July 2, while rallying his brigade in the most gallant manner to the terrific encounter in the streets of Gettysburg, Col. Cross was severely wounded by a minnie ball, which entered the abdomen in front and came out near the spine. The brave soldier survived his injuries only six hours, experiencing during that time the most intense physical pain and suffering. During those hours of keenest anguish he was in a conscious state, and frequently asked how his "brave boys" were doing. He expressed great interest in the result of the battle, and when told of the continued successes of our arms, a cheerful smile lighted up his countenance. At one time, feeling a little easier, he turned to Surgeon Buckman and said: "Doctor, do you think I can live to get home?" His kind attendant answered: "I fear you will live only a few hours." At this reply the wounded man covered his face with his hands and exclaimed: "Oh! my mother." About midnight he grew weaker very fast, and at half-past twelve the brave warrior slept the sleep of death. His last words were: "I did hope I would live to see peace and our country restored. Thank Heaven, I have done my duty. I think the boys will miss me. Oh! welcome death! Say farewell to all." At this juncture his mind commenced wandering, and he could be heard giving various commands to his men, as if he were again on the field of battle.

The mortal remains of the deceased were taken to Baltimore and embalmed, and immediately afterwards conveyed to his home in Lancaster, at which place they arrived on the Tuesday evening following his death. The funeral exercises occurred on Thursday, at six o'clock in the afternoon, and were conducted by the North Star Lodge of Free-Masons. The national flags drooped at half-mast; the band played solemn dirges; the fraternity in large numbers assisted in the solemn ceremonies, and amid a circle of kindred and a throng of people who had known him from boyhood, the brave soldier, the true friend, the impulsive and honorable man, was borne to his final resting-place in that valley which, amid all his wanderings, he had always loved so well. The evening hour was selected for the obsequies, in accordance with an oft-expressed wish of the deceased.

The life of Col. Cross was truly an eventful one. It commenced peacefully in a quiet pleasant town in northern New Hampshire, but the stirring scenes he passed through before its close, few men witness. He was wounded, it is stated, previously to the battle of Fredericksburg, no less than eleven times, three of the wounds being serious. A protecting hand shielded his life from the bullets of the Indians when fighting them in Arizonia, from those of the duelist, and from the many missiles of death hurled at him by the rebels, until his last battle at Gettysburg.

Few men who were in the army with Col. Cross had participated in the number of skirmishes and battles that had marked his brilliant career, or who bore so many honorable scars from ball, shell and arrow. Those who served under him affirmed that he shrank from no duty, nor hardship or dangers in any form, and that he was in his highest element when amid the clash and storm of battle. His soldiers abounded in stories illustrating the courage, resolution and endurance of their Colonel. A strict and thorough disciplinarian, he had the warmest feelings for his men, and constantly studied their comfort and welfare, his long experience in campaigning enabling him to meet every emergency of a soldier's life. Punishing with severity any shirking or neglect of duty, he was ever prompt to recognize and reward actual merit. Brave to the utmost limit, his regiment was always in the front, where it performed prodigies of valor. His invariable command to his men in battle was, to follow their leader. The deceased was fitted by nature for a military man. From earliest youth he was a student in the science of warfare. Firm resolution, indomitable energy, superior bravery under all circumstances, and a quickness of apprehension which enabled him in the heat of battle to take every advantage of the enemy—all conduced to elevate him to a position of eminent superiority. In physique, he was a model of manly and developed strength, and was capable of enduring a great amount of hardship and fatigue. While in the city of Hermisillo, the Mexican authorities wished to forward important dispatches to Guaymas. The route was infested by guerrillas, but this did not deter Col. Cross from volunteering his services. He set out at daybreak on horseback and reached Guaymas at eight in the evening, making four short halts on the journey. The distance was one hundred and thirteen miles. Tarrying twenty-four hours, he commenced the return trip, and again made the distance in about the same time. The family of the deceased has been noted for longevity and great bodily powers. Joseph Cross, the paternal grandfather of the Colonel, was a soldier of the Revolution, and died a few years since in the full possession of his faculties and at the advanced age of one hundred and three years. The decided military talent of the Cross family is shown in the fact that, it has furnished thirteen commissioned officers for various armies of the United States. In the bloody conflict of Fair Oaks, four brothers and three cousins fought bravely in the Union army. During most of the year previous to his death, Col. Cross had been an acting Brigadier-General, and a commission of that rank would in all probability have been soon given him.

As a man, the deceased was ardent, impetuous and unreserved in his acts and feelings. A true patriot and earnest lover of his country, for which he gave his life, he was wont on all occasions to canvass freely the policy or motives involved in the great struggle; but his faith was not complete with words, for he subjected it to the practical test of the battle-field, from whence it derived its purity.

As a son and brother, he was kind, attentive and observing. His parents and relatives were always the source of remembrance and solicitude, and his practical kindness was frequent and abundant.

Of a strong and original intellect, Col. Cross was in boyhood an intense reader and keen observer. His mind was particularly active, and he had prepared data for literary and scientific works of great value. One of his strongest emotions, was his love of the place of his nativity. His visits there were intensely enjoyed, and his frequently expressed wish was, that wherever he might die he might be carried home and buried. One great motive for his visiting the East while residing in Arizonia, was, that he might receive the Masonic degrees in the old Lodge at Lancaster.

Devoting his life to his country, he yielded it up in its prime, and passed away while the nation was yet convulsed in the throes of rebellion. Life's troubled warfare o'er, he sleeps near the home of his youth, among the friends of his boyhood and noble manhood. A career crowned with active, honorable labor, has ended in a warrior's death. May the turf rest lightly upon his grave and his name be sacredly linked with the illustrious dead of the recent conflict and of the Revolution.

Major Edward E. Sturtevant, Fifth Volunteer Infantry.

In the Spring of 1861, when the nation called for the services of her sons, Major Edward E. Sturtevant was the first man from New Hampshire to enlist in our second war for independence; and was also the first man from this State to receive authority to recruit under the President's call for seventy-five thousand three months' men. His biographical record is brief, but honorable in the highest degree. He was born in Keene, August 7, 1826.—His parents, George W. and Fanny W. Sturtevant, are now living. The deceased was bred to the occupation of a printer in his native town; but removed to Concord soon after completing his apprenticeship, and found employment in the office of the New Hampshire Courier, then in charge of John C. Wilson, Esq., in whom he found a generous and faithful friend. He was subsequently employed in the office of the Statesman, and at a later period upon the columns of the Washington Union, and the Richmond Dispatch, everywhere establishing a good name as a practical printer.

He was naturally, however, of too active and venturesome a spirit to be content with any sedentary employment, and in 1855 he accepted an appointment as one of the police force for the city of Concord, in which capacity he won an enviable reputation for shrewdness, fidelity and pluck. He held this position until the inauguration of civil war. Dropping without a moment's hesitation the pursuits of civil life, he was immediately appointed a recruiting officer, and in a few days, by his own personal influence and example, he enlisted two hundred and twenty-six men and received a commission as Captain in the First Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry.

Major Sturtevant was influenced in taking up arms, mainly by a correct and thorough appreciation of the great principles which were at issue. He had, however, a natural fondness and aptitude for military life. In former years he marched at the head of the militia of the State capital, where he was often especially commended for the drill and discipline of his command. But Major Sturtevant was no holiday soldier. He had little fondness for parade and show. His spirit chafed at the inactivity which characterized the bloodless campaign of the First New Hampshire, and immediately on the expiration of his first term of service, he was ready again to take the field. He felt that he had enlisted for the war. In all his letters to his friends, he manifested no weariness nor impatience in the service to which he had devoted his energies—no thought of turning his back to the enemy till death or victory released him from personal obligation to his beloved country.

On the organization of the "Fighting Fifth"—an honorable epithet which the deceased did his full share to win and maintain—he was commissioned as Captain of Company A. During the protracted and harrassing fatigue-duty of this gallant regiment, on every toilsome march, in every battle and skirmish, up to the hour of his death, Major Sturtevant was with his command.—Could his nameless grave be identified, it could wear no fitter, no prouder inscription than "the Rappahannock, Yorktown, Fair Oaks, Peach Orchard. Savage's Station, White Oak Swamp, Charles City Cross Roads, Malvern Hill, South Mountain, Antietam, Charlestown, Fredericksburg."

During the "seven days fight," he was in command of his regiment, and handled his men with conspicuous skill and gallantry. Upon the resignation of Major Cook, in July, 1862, he received merited promotion, and still further distinction awaited him at the hour of his untimely death. No man more richly deserved it. In point of courage, personal endurance and capacity for securing at once the obedience and affection of his men, he had no superior in his regiment. On the skirmish line and on dangerous picket duty, he especially distinguished himself. While his regiment was building the "Grape Vine Bridge" over the Chickahominy, Major Sturtevant's company alone covered their important undertaking. Again, in the brief lull during the battle of Fair Oaks, his command was nearest the enemy. From South Mountain to Antietam, and again in McClellan's advance on Charlestown, he led the skirmish line. He loved this dangerous service. The excitement, the freedom from restraint, appealed irresistably to his adventurous spirit; and his shrewdness, fertility in resources and strong hold on the affections of his men abundantly fitted him for the position.

He entered upon the battle of Fredericksburg, acting as Lieut-Colonel, with sad presentiments and yet with cheerful alacrity. The event justified his mournful expectations. The Fifth left scores of her bravest and best men on that blood-stained field; but none braver, none more imbued with generous impulses and manly devotion than Major Edward E. Sturtevant. The manner of his death—the place of his burial is unknown. We know only that he was seen on that fatal field at dark, severely wounded by a minie ball; that he was buried where he would have chosen to be intered—on the field where he fell, among the nameless heroes whose interests he had ever made his own. As has well been said "a braver man or more faithful friend, never yielded up his spirit amidst the clangor of arms and the wail of the dying.—Peace to his memory."

Lieutenant-Colonel Henry H. Pearson, Sixth Volunteer Infantry.

Among the many brave young Union men who at the commencement of the Secession war exchanged their books for the musket or the sword was Lieutenant-Colonel Henry H. Pearson, who was born in Newport, Ill., on the 26th day of February, 1840. Gifted by nature with fine mental abilities, he soon evinced an eager thirst for knowledge, and what little money he could at any time command, was devoted to the purchase of useful books, which he read and re-read with intense avidity. On his father's removing to Bloomington in 1854, he came to the determination to obtain, if possible, a liberal education and went to work in a lumber yard at Lincoln on the St. Louis Railroad, in order to meet the expenses of his preparatory studies.

He came to Exeter Academy in 1860, and soon distinguished himself as a close, faithful and able scholar, gaining by his strength of mind, his application to his books; his dignified deportment; his uniform good nature and forbearance, the good will and respect of his instructors and associates. They who knew him saw that he had a purpose—that his mind was filled with noble aspirations and that he promised in some way to signalize himself. For this the opportunity was soon presented. On the breaking out of the rebellion, the fiery spirit of young Pearson was aroused; he saw the flag of his native land insulted; he felt his whole being moved with holy indignation at the affront; he saw no more charms in Greek and Roman learning, but closed his Cicero and Zenophon and left at once the academic grove for the seat of war. So eager was his ardent spirit to reach the scene of conflict, that he walked from Baltimore to Washington. Here he joined a company and remained on duty until after the first disastrous battle of Bull Run.

Returning to Exeter in the autumn of 1861, he received a Captain's commission and set himself at work with patriotic zeal to raise his company.

At the same time he commenced the reading of the military campaigns of Napoleon and made plans of his great battles. He studied with intense delight the movements on the field of Waterloo, and drew diagrams of the same. He read also the war reports of McClellan, Mordecai and Delafield, and digested and remembered their teachings. In order to raise his company he appointed war meetings in the neighboring towns and there addressed the people. He always spoke with modesty, simplicity and effect. On the 22d of November, his company (C) left Exeter for Keene to join the Sixth Regiment and proceeded thence to the seat of war.

The next month, the citizens of Exeter presented him a sword and other testimonials of their regard and esteem. In April, 1862, he led his well-disciplined company against the enemy at Camden, North Carolina. The next engagement in which he participated was at Bull Run, August 29th. This was a hot and sanguinary action for the Sixth New Hampshire Regiment, and the deceased exhibited great coolness and bravery in commanding his company. He afterwards wrote sketches of the two battles mentioned above and also prepared diagrams to accompany them, all of which were published. These papers disclosed great breadth of mind, keen discrimination and a remarkable knowledge of the principal military movements upon those occasions.

After displaying unusual heroism at Chantilly, South Mountain, Antietam and Fredericksburg, the Sixth Regiment gained fresh laurels at Vicksburg and Jackson, Mississippi, in June and July of 1863; and in December of that year, its members re-enlisted for three years' longer service. The bravery and intelligence of the deceased, entitled him to promotion; and it was with a very high degree of pleasure that his friends beheld his merit, acknowledged and welcomed him as Lieutenant-Colonel of his regiment on a brief visit to New Hampshire at the close of his hard campaigns in the West.

With enlarged views, with maturer patriotism, with a more manly bearing, Colonel Pearson went into the great campaign of 1864, and his friends predicted, from the wisdom and the nobleness he manifested, that a brilliant military career was opening before him.

He went into the battle of the Wilderness, and led his men, who loved him as a brother, through the desperate struggles which ensued, and on the 26th of May, near Topolotomy Creek, about twelve miles from Richmond, he was shot through the head by a rebel sharpshooter and died about two hours afterwards. His companions buried him the next day on the banks of the North Anna, and one of them writes from his grave "that no regiment has lost an officer that was more lamented, nor has the service been bereft of a better man or truer patriot."

Lieut-Col. Pearson was born to command. He was over six feet in height, erect and well proportioned; his brow was large and full, his countenance open, his eye clear, his voice resonant, and his whole manner dignified and noble. A genuine patriot to his hearts' core, he asked no higher honor than to lay down his life for the salvation of his country.

It is not probable that he ever felt the meaning of that word "fear." His soul was quiet, indeed, but full of the sacred fire of heroism. The booming of the rifled cannon was music to his ear, nor did he ever quail before its flash.

Generous to a fault, he was ever ready to share his last morsel with the humblest soldier, and to bear with him the heat and burden of the day and the brunt and the hardships of battle, and hence his men loved him with deep affection and devotion.

His reading was mainly confined to history and the art of war; his mind was enriched by careful observation, his memory re-tentive, and his style of writing clear and forcible. His ruling passion was to be of service to his country.

Colonel Haldimand Sumner Putnam, Seventh Volunteer Infantry.

This lamented officer who met death so bravely at the attack upon Fort Wagner, on Morris' Island, on the 18th of July, 1863, was born in Cornish, New Hampshire, on the 15th of October, 1835, and was a son of the Hon. John L. Putnam, now living. After receiving a common school and an academic education, he, at the age of about sixteen years, entered the Military Academy at West Point, from which Institution he was graduated with high honors in July, 1857. He was immediately brevetted a Second Lieutenant in the corps of Topographical Engineers, and entered the United States service. From his leaving West Point to the breaking out of the rebellion, Col. Putnam, then a line officer, was on duty at different localities on the Western frontier. For faithful services, he was commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the Engineer Corps, and was subsequently promoted to a First Lieutenancy. In all the positions tendered him, he proved a brave and efficient officer, and invariably won the high esteem of his ranking superiors. With his command he was often called upon to undergo many long and fatiguing marches. One severe journey from the western coast to the Utah country is worthy of especial notice. It occurred in the winter season, and the troops suffered intensely from cold and subsequently from hunger. Their last ration was consumed the day before they reached the vicinity of Salt Lake City. In all these trying circumstances Col. Putnam exhibited superior courage and a fixed determination to brave manfully all the dangers which might gather in his pathway. When the dark clouds of disunion raised their gloomy forms in the southern horizon, he was summoned to Washington and entrusted with special messages of the highest importance to carry to Fort Pickens. He travelled by rail through the South, accomplished his mission, and was returning to the North, when he was seized at Montgomery, Alabama, by the military authorities and there kept in prison several days. He was finally released and returned to Washington. Soon afterwards he was given an important position on the staff of Gen. McDowell, where he remained until he entered the volunteer military service from New Hampshire. While on Gen. McDowell's staff, Col. Putnam performed many arduous and responsible duties, and his superior military talent was universally acknowledged. In the first battle of Bull Run he was in the thickest of the action, but escaped unharmed.

The fame of this young officer soon reached his native State, and Gov. Berry, quick to appreciate Col. Putnam's merits, offered him the command of the Seventh Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry. When the proposition reached him, his heart filled with pleasure, but exhibiting that rare modesty which is always allied to true greatness, he promptly replied and stated that he thought himself too young and inexperienced to fill so responsible a position. Upon being further urged, however, he, with no little diffidence, consented at last to the proposition, and, with permission from the War Department, hastened to the Granite State, where a thousand brave men welcomed the young commander with patriotic enthusiasm. He was commissioned as Colonel on the 15th of October, 1861. His regiment, which had been raised by Lieutenant-Colonel Joseph C. Abbott of Manchester, (late Brevet Brigadier General,) was soon brought into the highest state of discipline, and, on the 14th of January, 1862, Col. Putnam, with his noble command, departed for the theatre of war. During the first year of its service his regiment was stationed at Fort Jefferson, on the Tortugas Islands. Afterwards the command was located at St. Augustine, Fla , Port Royal, S. C., and in the vicinity of Charleston. Though not engaged in any important actions until the memorable assault upon Fort Wagner, Col. Putnam's forces participated in many skirmishes and expeditions, where, under their gallant leader, they seldom failed to be successful. In March, 1863, Col. Putnam was commissioned a Captain in the United States army.

In his relations to his regiment, the deceased, though a strict disciplinarian, ever secured and retained the warmest affections of his men. The soldiers who served under him knew that in his heart there was love for each and all of them, and, in whatever position they were placed, they had implicit confidence in their commander. From the day of his assuming command of the regment until he fell upon the field of glory, not a single murmur or complaint came back to New Hampshire from either officers or men. For several months preceding the engagement at Morris Island, Col. Putnam had been an Acting Brigadier General, and was fighting with that rank on the day which terminated his earthly career. His forces consisted of his own regiment and several organizations from the middle States. In the terrible assault upon Fort Wagner, he displayed the sublimest courage and bravery. Through a deadly storm of shot and shell, he led forward his command, encouraging his men with his own heroic example, until crowned with the "blood-red blossoms of war," he fell wounded and dying and from the field of death and carnage his pure spirit winged its way upward to the skies.

In the death of Acting Brigader-General Putnam, the Union army lost one of its bravest and best commanders, who is mourned as one who united with the highest military talent a spotless character and the most endearing qualities of head and heart. The recollection of his pure life and heroic death will ever be sacredly cherished by a large circle of kindred and friends, as well as by the many soldiers who served in his command, while a grateful nation will embalm his memory in her deepest and holiest affections.

Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Albert Henderson, Seventh Volunteer Infantry.

Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Albert Henderson was a son of Capt. Samuel H. Henderson and was born in Dover, New Hampshire, December 1st, 1833. Having completed the requisite preparatory studies at Gilmanton Academy, he entered Bowdoin College in the fall of 1851 and graduated with marked distinction and at the head of his class in 1855. For three years following he was the Principal of the Franklin Academy in Dover, where he prepared many young men for college. He was an accomplished and popular teacher and his career in that capacity was successful in the highest degree. During this time and for some months afterwards, he read law in the office of Messrs. Woodman and Doe of Dover, and from 1860 to 1861 he finished his course of legal study at the Harvard Law School, where he attracted the attention of the faculty and students by his conspicuous abilities, and where he attained great prominence as a debater. He won the highest prize for a legal essay, and received the degree of LL. B., in 1861. In the summer of the same year he was admitted to the Suffolk Bar of Massachusetts, and was eager to enter at once upon the practice of his profession.

But in the meantime civil war was precipitated, and believing it to be the paramount duty of every man to give his services, and if need be his life, to his country, the deceased turned away from the most flattering professional prospects, and after several months of military drill and instruction at Norwich, Vermont, he entered the service November 4th, 1861, as Adjutant of the Seventh New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry.

With his regiment he encountered the perils and privations of a winter voyage to the Tortugas Islands, where he was stationed till the command was ordered to Port Royal in the summer of 1862. The lamented Col. Putnam early discerned Adjutant Henderson's soldierly qualities, and upon his urgent recommendation, he was commissioned as Major, August 26th, 1862.

In the unsuccessful assault upon Fort Wagner he acted as an aide to Colonel Putnam, who fell at the head of the storming column, and in consequence of whose death, Lieutenant-Colonel Abbott was promoted to the Colonelcy, and Major Henderson to the Lieutenant-Colonelcy of the Regiment, July 22d, 1863. Subsequently the deceased served on the staff of General Seymour, and was Provost Marshal of Florida during the campaign which resulted in the disastrous battle of Olustee. In the Spring of 1864, the Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers were transferred to Virginia, and Lieutenant-Col. Henderson led his regiment in the action of Drury's Bluff, where his skill and gallantry elicited the highest commendations from the Commanding General.

On Tuesday, the 16th of August, 1864, while commanding his regiment in the engagement at Deep Bottom, near Richmond, on the north bank of the James River, he received a mortal wound in the hip, which severed the principal artery. Despite all that surgical skill and attention could do, he expired in about three hours from the time he was shot. His body was embalmed and sent home in charge of Chaplain Emerson, and was buried September 2d, 1864, at Pine Hill Cemetery, in his native city, amid the mourning of a great circle of relatives and friends. Thus perished, in the opening of manhood and in the faithful discharge of duty, a brave and talented officer, a superior scholar, a lawyer of brilliant promise, and an honest, pure and earnest man.

The deceased was in all respects a person of very superior mould. His mind was one of remarkable originality and power. He loved to grapple with great questions, and to engage in abstruse investigations in all departments of inquiry. The pure mathematics were his pastime, in which branch of study he greatly excelled. His love for the languages of antiquity, for history and poetry, for moral and political philosophy and general literature, broadened and enriched his mind and made him a man of admirable taste and culture. His scholarship even in early youth was ripe and comprehensive, and the affluence of his general learning was remarkable. His powers, so large and various by nature, were so thoroughly trained and disciplined as to be completely within his control, and could be applied to any task with a vigor and intensity which made success almost inevitable.

Bringing to his profession peculiar patience in investigation, and a logical and analytical faculty of the highest order, he had already laid broad and deep the foundations for legal learning.—Though he had never entered upon practice, the range of his professional knowledge and research was surprisingly wide. His Essay, for which he was awarded the first prize at the Harvard Law School, was a proof and illustration of his legal abilities.

His intellectual superiority was fully matched by his inflexible morality, and the stainless purity of his life. He had also a perfect devotion to duty and an earnestness of purpose only equalled by the intense will and energy with which his prescribed work was performed. Generous and sincere, and at the same time uncompromising upon any point of honor or honesty, he had great charity for all men.

Among the many attractive peculiarities of Lieutenant-Colonel Henderson's character will be vividly remembered his exuberant wit and humor—a humor that had little bitterness in it, but which disported itself with harmless pleasantries and left no wound or pain. In the home circle the deceased was beloved in the relations of a dutiful son, an affectionate brother, and a kind, considerate and warm-hearted friend. In the army his varied and responsible duties were all discharged with fidelity and patriotic devotion, while his constant cheerfulness, courteous amenity and uniform kindness, made him universally beloved by officers and men.

Lieutenant-Colonel Henderson's early death prevented his gaining that general fame to which he was entitled by superior endowments and rare moral excellence—but the Nation, in whose behalf he gave up his life, and the State upon whose escutcheon he helped to shed so much light and glory, will ever honor his memory and inscribe his name high upon the sacred roll of their heroic dead.

Major Daniel Smith, Seventh Volunteer Infantry.

In the summer of 1861, when darkness gathered about the nation, and when the necessity of a united north and a vigorous army became apparent, the late Major Daniel Smith, of the Seventh Regiment of Infantry, then a private citizen of Dover, was convinced that duty to his country called upon him to take up arms in her defence. Severing himself from a family which seemed to need his constant care, and with sad presentiments that he should perish in the war, he offered his services to Governor Berry, and on the fifteenth of October was commissioned as Major of the Seventh Regiment. His previous history was brief, but highly honorable. A son of Winthrop Smith, Esq., he was born in Durham, January 27th, 1823, and descended from an ancient and highly respected family. After attendance at the common school, he received privileges for an academic education at Greenland and Pittsfield. By occupation he was a land surveyor, in which pursuit he was eminently successful. He early joined the State militia, and in 1850 was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel of the Twenty-Fifth New Hampshire Infantry. In 1854 he removed to Dover, where his ability, sound sense, energy and honorable character, soon gave him prominence in all the deliberations and important movements of that city. Previous to his removal to Dover he had filled many positions of trust and honor in his native town. From 1855 to 1860, Major Smith served as a Deputy Sheriff, and for three years was City Marshal and also represented the city of Dover in the State Legislature in 1860 and 1861. Soon after receiving his military appointment, the deceased repaired to Manchester and accompanied his regiment to the Tortugas Islands, thence to Florida, and from there to Beaufort, South Carolina, where he was seized with fever. Medical skill failing to arrest his malady, he returned home prostrated by disease and died on the 26th of August, 1862, leaving a widow and four children.

At the Tortugas Islands he served as Provost Marshal, and to his discipline and discreet management, the troops there were greatly indebted for their security and health. In the social relations of life, he was a cheerful and agreeable companion, fond of pleasantries and quick to perceive and appreciate wit and character. His native shrewdness rendered him very successful in detecting and apprehending criminals. While in the army he discharged all his duties with fidelity, promptness and valor, while his kind demeanor won for him the respect of his fellow officers and soldiers. His grave teaches afresh the lesson of patriotism and of devotion to the nation.

Lieutenant-Colonel Oliver Woodbury Lull, Eighth Volunteer Infantry.

In the assault upon the rebel fortifications at Port Hudson, Louisiana, on the twenty-seventh day of May, 1863, the list of heroic dead included Lieutenant-Colonel Oliver Woodbury Lull, of the Eighth Volunteer Infantry. He was born in Weare, this State, January 14th, 1826. Up to his eighteenth year his opportunities for obtaining an education were limited to the public schools of his native town, but in 1844 he removed to Manchester, and passed through a thorough course of academic study in the High School of that city. It was his cherished desire to obtain a collegiate education, but his limited means caused him, with much regret, to abandon that project. Upon leaving the Manchester High School, he went to Framingham, Mass., where he engaged for a time in teaching and afterwards commenced the study of law. Returning to Manchester he completed the prescribed course in the office of the Hon. David Cross, and in May, 1851, was admitted to the Hillsborough County Bar. The deceased then removed to Milford and established himself in his profession, where he remained until he entered the military service. During his twelve years practice of the law in Milford, he proved himself an attorney of marked enterprise and ability. His prominent characteristics were great perseverance and untiring industry. He united with a rare tenacity of purpose an unwearied and laudable ambition and a manly and fearless independence of thought and action. The possession of such qualities of character admirably fitted him for the discharge of military duties. In times of peace, he always manifested a great interest in the State Volunteer Militia. Soon after the organization of the Governor's Horse Guards he was elected a member of that Corps, and in January, 1861, was promoted to a first Lieutenancy, which position he held at the time of his entering the military service of the United States.

When the lurid fires of civil war were painted upon the Southern sky, the altars of patriotism burned anew at the North, and the heart of Lieut-Col. Lull was moved with love of country, and with the desire to be enrolled among the defenders of his nation's honor. In that fearful crisis old prejudices and former partisan views were nothing to him. He saw only the pathway of duty, which was to stand up for the Government and to follow the flag. In the organization of some of the earlier New Hampshire regiments, he rendered valuable service and assistance. When the Eighth was being raised, many brave men from Nashua, Milford and vicinity enlisted in its ranks, and soon the name of the deceased was brought forward in connection with a command in that regiment. The matter was immediately carried before Governor Berry and the Executive Council, and on the first day of October, 1861, Oliver W. Lull was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Eighth New Hampshire Volunteers. He accepted the appointment with pleasure and leaving a large and successful professional practice, he at once repaired to Manchester to assist Colonel Fearing in perfecting the organization of the regiment. The troops were soon brought to a state of superior discipline, and on the twenty-fifth day of January, 1862, the regiment by order of General Butler, left New Hampshire and repaired to Fort Independence in Boston harbor. Here it remained until the sixteenth of the following month, when in company with other forces, it departed for Ship Island, Mississippi.

Of the subsequent career of the Eighth Regiment and of the distinguished services which Lieutenant-Colonel Lull rendered on many important occasions, we need not speak in detail. He was invariably faithful to his duty and to his country. In the actions of Bisland, Georgia Landing, Labadieville and Opelousas, he displayed great courage and heroism. In battle he seemed unmindful of the shafts of death falling on every side, and regardless of his own safety, led forward his men through storms of shot and shell.

In the terrible assault upon the fortifications of Port Hudson on the 27th of May, he displayed the exalted courage and bravery. He was at that time serving temporarily upon General Emery's staff, but Colonel Fearing being in charge of a brigade, Lieutenant-Colonel Lull voluntarily returned and took command of his men. The advance was ordered and the troops moved forward. The Eighth Regiment was among the forces at the head of the column, and with unequalled heroism its brave men charged directly upon the rebel forces. The conflict was desperate, but at length the enemy began to retreat with heavy loss. Lieutenant-Col. Lull was constantly at the head of his command, and the fourth rebel line had just been passed, when in the act of cheering his men he fell pierced with a rifle ball. The wound was very severe, but not instantly fatal. He was immediately carried to the rear, where in a few hours a heroic death terminated his anguish and suffering. His body was carried to New Orleans and placed in a receiving tomb, and there remained till the following autumn, when it was brought home to Milford for burial. The funeral services were held November 17th, in the church where the deceased was accustomed to worship, and the edifice was filled to repletion with sorrowing kindred and friends. A detachment of the Governor's Horse Guards was present and performed military honors. At the close of religious services, Hon. David Cross of Manchester, being invited to speak, made some extended remarks, relating many gratifying incidents in the life of the deceased. The remains of the distinguished dead were then carried to the village cemetery and deposited in a grave which will be honored so long as a grateful nation treasures up the memory of her fallen heroes.

While in the military service, Lieutenant-Col. Lull discharged many responsible duties while temporarily absent from his command. He was for a time upon General Weitzel's staff, and afterwards for several months, upon the staff of General Emory.—In both of those positions he won the highest esteem of his superior officers. During the winter of 1862 and '63, he was Provost Marshal Judge at Thibodeaux, Louisiana. In his character there were many valuable and endearing qualities of head and heart. The friendships which he formed were firm and enduring to the last. Before leaving for the army he was presented by his friends with a valuable horse and a sword as memorials of their esteem and regard. In his associations with his regiment he was a strict disciplinarian, but was invariably beloved by his men.—He constantly studied the comfort and welfare of his soldiers, who soon learned that they would not be called upon to endure any dangers or privations which their commander would not willingly share with them. While in the army his correspondence with his wife and child and with other kindred, exhibited a true and noble devotion to his country. In answering a letter from his wife where she expressed a desire that he might come home, he said: "I wish much to see you all, but I cannot leave my command. There is a great work before us, and I have no desire to go from the field until it is accomplished. If my life is spared till the rebellion is overcome, how much happier you will be to think that in my humble way I was instrumental in restoring the country to peace and prosperity."

On the morning preceding his death, he sat down in his tent before the battle opened and wrote in his diary the following: "In one hour we commence the storming of Port Hudson. Many of us will not see another day. If I shall be one of that number, I will have done my duty." Sincere words of a noble soldier. Death soon came to him and claimed the spirit of a brave warrior, whose blood was freely shed in the defence of our common nationality.

Major George Washington Everett, Ninth Volunteer Infantry.

This lamented officer was born in New London, November 19, 1819. His educational privileges embraced the public schools and the Academy of his native town. After pursuing a course of legal study in the office of Walter P. Flanders, Esq., he was in October, 1847, admitted to the Merrimack County Bar. In preparing for his profession he relied entirely upon himself for pecuniary means, and exhibited a diligence and ambition worthy of the highest commendation. Immediately after his admittance to the bar, he commenced the practice of law in the town of his birth, where he continued in business until he entered the military service. As a lawyer Major Everett was very favorably known, while outside of his professional career he was recognized as a gentleman of high ambition, of studied culture and of acknowledged ability. From 1856 to 1861, he was the Solicitor for Merrimack County and discharged the duties of that office in a very efficient and gratifying manner. In 1852 he was honored with a seat in the lower branch of the State Legislature, and was re-elected to that body in 1856.

The great rebellion which was inaugurated at Fort Sumter, found Major Everett on the side of justice and his country. To him the path of duty was plain. It was to meet force with force, until armed resistance to the Government should everywhere be overcome. Entertaining such views, he, in the summer of 1862, offered his services to the military authorities of New Hampshire, and was commissioned as Major of the Ninth Volunteer Infantry. Sickness prevented his leaving the State with his regiment on the 25th day of August, but he was soon afterwards enabled to join his command.

During a connection of one year with the army, Major Everett proved himself a brave and faithful officer. In various battles and skirmishes, he shrank from the performance of no duty that was assigned him. Kind and generous in thought and deed, he was invariably beloved by his soldiers and esteemed by his fellow officers.

Early in August, 1863, as the Ninth Regiment was coming up the Mississippi River from Vicksburg the deceased was taken dangerously ill, and continuing to grow worse he stopped on his arrival at Cincinnati, hoping that a few days rest would restore him to health. Contrary to all expectations, he failed very rapidly and on the 27th of August, just one year and one day from the date of his commission, the patient sufferer quietly breathed his last. His mortal remains, in charge of the late Lieutenant Orville Smith, were conveyed home to a sorrowing wife and family. The funeral exercises occurred at New London on Monday, August 31st, and were held at the Baptist Church which was densely crowded with kindred and sympathizing friends and citizens. At the conclusion of the general services the body was given in charge to the Mount Horeb Commandery of Knights Templar of Concord, of which Masonic organization the deceased was an esteemed associate, and by the members of that ancient order were conveyed to the village cemetery, where with impressive ceremonies they were sacredly consigned to the silent grave.

Lieutenant-Colonel Moses N. Collins, Eleventh Volunteer Infantry.

In the sanguinary battle of the Wilderness, the Eleventh New Hampshire Regiment lost heavily. Among its killed in that memorable action was Lieutenant-Colonel Moses N. Collins, whose birth occurred in Brentwood, in April, 1820. Receiving an academic education at Gilmanton and Hampton Falls, he engaged in teaching for several years in the State of Maryland. Subsequently he commenced the study of law in the office of Messrs. Murphy and Bartlett of Epping, but completed his course at Exeter with the Hon. Gilman Marston, late a Brigadier General of Volunteers. On being admitted to the Rockingham County Bar in 1857, he immediately established himself in his profession at Exeter, where he soon became known as an able and successful lawyer.

The dark national days of the summer of 1862, lighted anew the fires of patriotism in the hearts of the Union people of the North. The uncertain results of the Peninsular campaign caused a deep anxiety to spread over the land, and thousands of patriots rushed to arms as the call for more men came over the wires from Washington. This summons found a response in the person of Moses N. Collins, whom Governor Berry immediately appointed Major of the Eleventh Regiment of Volunteer Infantry, which was then being raised and organized amidst a patriotic enthusiasm almost unprecedented in the military annals of the State. The lamented Captain Littlefield not being able to accept of his appointment in this regiment, Major Collins was commissioned as Lieutenant-Colonel on the ninth of September. The organization of this military body was speedily effected, and on the 11th of September the troops departed for Washington.

In the different battles and skirmishes in which the Eleventh Regiment participated during nearly the first two years of its existence, the deceased bore an honorable and distinguished part. In one of those fearful charges upon the rebels at the battle of the Wilderness on the 6th of May, 1864, Lieutenant-Col. Collins was among the killed. He was conducting himself with the highest bravery, and unflinchingly met a true warrior's death. Although his mortal remains have not been brought back to his native State, yet wherever rest his ashes there is the grave of a sincere patriot and a faithful soldier. In civil life the deceased had been honored with important trusts, and was a member of the lower branch of the State Legislature from Brentwood in 1855, and from Exeter in 1861 and 1862.

Chaplain Thomas Lyford Ambrose, Twelfth Volunteer Infantry.

Chaplain Thomas Lyford Ambrose fell not in the serried rank nor at the head of storming column, but the record of his military service is the memorial of a brave and faithful patriot and of an earnest and self-sacrificing Christian laborer. His previous history dates his birth at Ossipee, in May, 1829. In youth he exhibited great physical energy, while at the same time his active mental powers gave promise of an early intellectual development. With the christian ministry in view, he, at the age of twenty-three years, entered Bowdoin College at Brunswick, Me., from which institution he was graduated with distinction in the summer of 1856. Soon afterwards he connected himself with a Theological Seminary in New York city where he remained one year, and subsequently completed the usual course of religious study at Andover, Massachusetts. On the 21st day of July, 1858, he was ordained in his native town as a minister of the gospel and as a missionary to Persia, and sailed from Boston, under the auspices of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, early in the following August. Arriving at Constantinople he journeyed overland to his destination at Oroomiah, a missionary station in Persia. In this foreign land Chaplain Ambrose labored for nearly three years with a faithful christian zeal and earnestness. His working-field was among the mountain Nestorians, where gratifying success crowned his ministrations. In the summer of 1861 he experienced a severe fever which left his constitution so enfeebled that by the urgent advice of his physician he reluctantly came home with the hope of recruiting his health, and of afterwards returning to Persia. On reaching the United States he saw the realization of that civil war whose ominous forebodings he had heard afar off.

A change of climate had a favorable effect upon his health, and with returning energies came the strong desire to render service to his country in her hour of trial. The Twelfth Regiment of Infantry having been raised and officered to a great extent in Belknap and Carroll counties, Governor Berry tendered its chaplaincy to the deceased who promptly accepted the position, and was commissioned on the 17th day of September, 1862. He immediately went into camp with the regiment at Concord, and with it left the State on the 27th instant. From that period to the time of his death he was scarcely absent a day from his post. All his physical and mental energies were unceasingly devoted to the faithful and efficient discharge of his varied and responsible duties. Possessing a pleasing address, warm and earnest sympathies and an unblemished christian character, he invariably won and retained the permanent esteem of the regiment. The soldiers proud of his friendship and gratified with his manly and upright conduct, called him the "model chaplain," which title he well merited and strictly honored.

At the battle of Chancellorsville, he was taken prisoner in company with Colonel Potter, but was soon afterwards released.

Having studied medicine to some extent, Chaplain Ambrose volunteered during the last few months of his connection with the army to perform daily duties at a hospital not far from the camp, in addition to his labors in the regiment. As he was walking from the military headquarters to the hospital one pleasant morning about the first of August, 1864, a rifle ball from the weapon of a concealed enemy struck him and severed the principal artery in one of his hips. The wound was carefully dressed at Fortress Monroe, and the sufferer appeared to be doing well, but a few days afterwards it was found necessary to again take up the artery. The patient at this time was considerably debilitated, and sinking under the influence of the operation he breathed his last on the morning of the nineteenth day of August. His remains were brought home and interred at Ossipee. Crowning with his life an unalterable devotion to the Nation, his memory will long be enshrined in the hearts of all who knew him.

Col. Alexander Gardiner, Fourteenth Volunteer Infantry.

At Winchester, in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley, whose fertile fields in the late war have been so often crimsoned with the blood of brave men, Colonel Alexander Gardiner of the Fourteenth Volunteer Infantry, fell mortally wounded on the nineteenth day of September, 1864. Remaining five hours in the hands of the enemy he was removed from the battlefield, and after suffering severely for nineteen days, with his wife and friends around him, he fell asleep in death, resigned to the will of God and happy in the hopes of a glorious immortality. His remains were brought home and interred at Claremont with impressive public and Masonic ceremonies.

Colonel Gardiner was born in 1833 in the State of New York, where he spent his youth until he arrived at the age of eighteen years, when he was induced to visit South America, partly on account of impaired health. Having remained there one year, he returned home and immediately afterwards entered Kimball Union Academy at Meriden, this State, to pursue his studies as a preparation for professional life. Having been successful as a student he left the Academy to enter upon the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in the city of New York at the age of twenty-two. After remaining there one year in the practice of law, he went to Kansas with the intention of establishing himself there in his professional business, and, also, to assist Col. Dayton in the publication of a paper. This last enterprize was soon broken up by the border ruffians and the deceased with characteristic devotion to freedom and justice, offered his services in the Kansas war, to aid in defending that Territory from the cruelty and barbarism which then attended it. He returned from the West with enfeebled health, and having experienced serious pecuniary loss. In the spring of 1859, Col. Gardiner came to Claremont, and when his country called him to its service no young man in the county of Sullivan had a more brilliant promise of success in his profession. He entered the Fourteenth Regiment as Adjutant, was subsequently promoted to Major and was commissioned Colonel just before the sanguinary conflict at Winchester, Virginia, where he received his death wound. As a student he was diligent and earnest in the pursuit of knowledge, obedient to all rules and prompt in the discharge of every duty. He was very courteous in his bearing towards his teachers, while his genial spirit, cheerful disposition and social qualities secured him the warm friendship of his associates.

As a lawyer he was thoroughly versed in the great principles of his profession, constantly studying and investigating authorities, so that he gained the confidence of the public as a safe counsellor and a successful pleader at the bar. He not only possessed a strong love, but the highest respect for his profession; hence he was modest and cautious in giving legal advice, refusing to manage cases of a doubtful character and manifesting the highest sense of honor not only in the management of his own professional business, but in all his intercourse with his associate practitioners.

In the army his keen sense of propriety led him to be very rigid in his requirements of his soldiers, while he spared no pains in informing himself of his own duties and avoided no hardships in their performance. A proof of his knowledge and ability in the profession of arms can be seen in the fact that he entered the military service a Lieutenant and fell upon the battlefield a Colonel, bravely leading his men into the deadly fight.

Major William Ide Brown, Eighteenth Volunteer Infantry.

On the night of Wednesday, the 29th of March, 1865, almost in the hour of the glorious and final triumph of the Union arms, fell William Ide Brown of the Eighteenth Volunteer Infantry. His regiment was in line of battle behind breast-works, to the right of Fort Steadman, prepared to resist an expected attack from the enemy. A fierce fire of shot, shell and minnie ball soon opened upon them. Passing along the line to see that his men, who were for the first time in action, did not waver, a rifle-bullet pierced his right temple and he fell dead upon the field.

Major Brown's career was short, but highly honorable and meritorious. Born in Attleborough, Mass., on the 27th of August, 1839, he was only approaching the age of twenty-six years at the time of his death. While he was yet a child his parents removed to Fisherville, this State, where they still reside. After having exhausted the limited educational advantages afforded by our village schools, he entered upon a course of study preparatory to college at New London. While connected with the Academy in that place he made a public profession of religion, uniting with the Baptist Church in Fisherville, and from that time prosecuting his studies with the Christian ministry in view.

Graduating at New London with distinction in 1858, he immediately entered upon his collegiate course at Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island. His four years passed at that venerable seat of learning were unmarked by any striking incidents. Major Brown's rank as a scholar was above the average of his class, while he devoted more than ordinary time to literary pursuits and to general reading outside the prescribed collegiate studies. Among his fellow-students he won an enviable reputation as a genial companion and self-sacrificing friend and at his graduation was honored with the perpetual Presidency of his class.

Graduating in 1862, with his health, which had been feeble from childhood, confirmed and strengthened by a judicious interest and participation in the athletic sports of college, Major Brown immediately made his preparations for entering upon his theological studies at Newton, Mass. His room was already engaged and his name enrolled with those of the entering class, when he heard the voice of his country calling him to arms and immediately deferred the sacred duty of preaching Christ, for what seemed to him the more sacred duty of defending the imperilled liberties of the nation. It was duty alone which impelled him to forsake the church for the camp. He had no fondness, no natural aptitude for a soldier's life. He was not in the least degree attracted by the "pomp and circumstance of glorious war." But he saw that certain vital principles of our free institutions were at stake and he seized the sword with alacrity and wielded it manfully till death released him from the claims of duty.

His character as a soldier was in consonance with the motives which led him to take up arms, and his natural preference for a quiet and sedentary life. He lacked that dash and brilliancy which are essential to the popular ideal of a military leader. But wherever duty called him he was ready to go—whatever duty bade him do was done promptly and well. Those who knew him best never anticipated for him any other release from the service of his country, than an honorable discharge or a glorious death. The deceased entered the army on the 10th of August, 1862, as Second Lieutenant in Company K, Ninth Regiment of New Hampshire Infantry—which company he assisted in recruiting. On the 1st of March, 1863, he was transferred with the rank of First Lieutenant to Company B, in the same regiment. On the death of Captain Alexander, he was tendered a captaincy, which he declined to accept. On the 1st of November, 1863, he was commissioned as Adjutant, a position for which his education and business habits admirably fitted him and which he held till his connection with the regiment was severed.

Major Brown's letters to his friends afford no record of hairbreadth escapes and personal achievements with which to enliven our brief sketch of his military life. But letters on file in this office bear testimony that from the time the regiment entered the service down to the disastrous explosion of the Petersburg mine, Adjutant Brown was with his command in every battle and skirmish and on every march; and by the fidelity with which he performed every duty devolving on him, he won the high esteem and admiration of officers and soldiers. At the close of active operations in the fall of 1864, he returned home on sick-leave, thoroughly worn out and dispirited by incessant fatigue and exposure. The comforts of home and the tender care of friends soon restored vigor to his exhausted frame and upon the organization of the Eighteenth Infantry he was tendered the position of Major, his commission bearing date October 13th, 1864. He was the first of the field officers of that regiment to join his command, from which, up to the hour of his decease, he had not been absent a single day.

His death was among the last sacrifices made by New Hampshire in the late Secession War which was inaugurated for the purpose of destroying the Government, but which has resulted in purifying and strengthening the Nation and in placing it firm forever upon the immutable foundations of justice, truth and freedom.

REPORTS OF N. H. STATE MILITARY AGENTS.

The following brief reports of the operations of New Hampshire State Military Agencies will be read with interest by all who have at heart the comfort and welfare of our patriotic, brave and devoted volunteers.

Too much praise cannot be awarded to Colonels Mason, Corson and Howe, for their faithful and efficient services and untiring devotion constantly rendered by them in the arduous duties that have devolved upon them, and which they have discharged in the most honorable and successful manner:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 20, 1865.

Brig. Gen. Natt Head, Adj't Gen. State of New Hampshire.

GENERAL:—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication, requesting of me some description of my duties and an account of my operations as New Hampshire State Agent, and I hasten to respond.

It is the duty of the State Agent, when a battle is pending, to gather in quantity such stores as are required for the relief of wounded soldiers; to have several assistants at hand to move at the earliest moment to the scene of suffering and administer relief; to see that the bodies of deceased soldiers from his State are properly buried and secured against depredations, and that such bodies as are called for by friends are properly prepared and forwarded to their homes; to visit hospitals or cause them to be visited, and such luxuries supplied as are necessary to the soldiers' comfort; to keep an exact registry of all men in hospitals, with their company, regiment and residence. Soldiers are mustered for pay every two months; but it is a very common thing for a soldier to be transit on muster-day and fail to get mustered; or, if mustered, he is liable to leave his place before the arrival of his paymaster, and hence lose one or more musters; so that several months may elapse before his accounts are corrected. The State Agent has ready access to the rolls, and it is his duty to follow from office to office until he gets the account adjusted, when he receives an order for payment. On the present muster-rolls this class of applicants are very numerous, and there is seldom a single day when some applications for assistance of this kind are not made. It is the duty of the State Agent to make applications for the transfer of soldiers in the various hospitals to their own State. Since December 1, 1864, I have made applications for the transfer of several hundreds of New Hampshire soldiers to the Webster General Hospital at Manchester, N. H. Men who are absent on furloughs frequently fail to return in season. Supposing they are properly reported by their attending physician, and ere they are aware, find themselves in some military prison or prison hospital with the charge of desertion against them. It is the duty of the State Agent to collect all facts in their favor and present them for their benefit, and if there appears no evidence of fraudulent intention on their part, he can generally get informalities overlooked and the delinquent ordered to duty without censure. The correspondence attending my duties require the writing of more than twenty letters per day, several of which are official, and have to be copied. I am prepared at all times to give the name, company, regiment and town of every New Hampshire soldier in this department, and can give much information concerning our soldiers in other departments. I am causing a journal to be prepared which will be of interest to the New Hampshire people. I receive such articles of comfort as the people at home see fit to supply for the soldier, and distribute these goods to such as I think need them most. I am much assisted in this duty by New Hampshire men, resident in this city. I frequently find a New Hampshire soldier sick with some disease that requires the tender treatment and pure air of home in order for his recovery. At present he is entirely out of money. As State Agent, I supply all such sums as are necessary to enable him to accomplish his object. The rooms of the agency are open day and night for the benefit of the New Hampshire soldier, and when he applies for anything in my power to afford, he is never turned empty away. Soldiers can always find refreshments and sometimes rude lodgings at the rooms of the Agency.

I at present employ one male assistant in canvassing hospitals, one lady assistant in preparing records and giving information to applicants during my absence from the rooms, and I employ other assistants transiently, as exigencies arrive. I have the honor to be, General,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. D. MASON,

Military State Agent of N. H.

OFFICE OF STATE MILITARY AGENT,
Philadelphia, March 1, 1865.

Natt Head, Adjutant General State of New Hampshire:

GENERAL:—Your letter requesting a report of my operations in this department, in behalf of your State's sick and wounded soldiers, is before me, and it is with pleasure that I comply with your request, being happy to avail myself of every opportunity to place before the people of your State a subject in which all should be interested.

It has been my purpose in this matter to make New Hampshire's exertions supplementary to those of the General Government's in bearing comfort to your sick and wounded soldiers lying in hospitals in this city, and I propose to let my work be a practical witness as to how I have succeeded.

That you may duly appreciate the size of our field of operations, let me state, that at the time when this report opens, we had twenty-seven hospitals, at distances varying from three to fifteen miles from the centre of the city. Subsequently these were reduced in number, though more than proportionately enlarged in their several extents; so that, though our hospital inmates have been brought within a rather more convenient range, their numbers are greater than before. The present hospitals here now contain about twenty-five thousand beds, (25,000). Within a short time after the arrival of any New Hampshire soldier in this city, through the kindness of Dr. Kenderdine, Medical Director of Transportation, I am furnished with his name, and the hospital to which he sent. He is then visited and localized,—that is, his regiment, company, ward, bed and disease are accurately registered, the particulars of his case inquired into, also the wants that spring from his peculiar condition. These, when physical, I can gratify or relieve only to the extent that the Surgeon in charge deems expedient.

After having once been noted, a constant watch is kept upon him. He is reported to his State, every subsequent change in his condition is followed up, and duplicates of the register sent to the State are kept at my office for reference and constant correction. A double advantage accrues by these simple means; the soldier's native State is kept informed of his whereabouts and condition; and comrades in this city,—since my office is a general headquarters and convalescent rendezvous,—can sociably avail themselves of the same intelligence.

The hospitals are visited in a general way daily, to ascertain wants, and see that they receive attention through that direct and personal supervision which it is my special duty to supply. A regular monthly round is made to note and report changes. In all these visits postage stamps, tobacco, stationery, &c., are distributed. Remembering the great extent of our city and the prominence that has been given it as a hospital depot, you will readily see that no inconsiderable outlay of energy and time is required, simply, to discover and keep the location and condition of the men. Stationery and postage stamps are no small items, when the demand for them is made by a class of people so intelligent as the generality of our soldiers. You must remember that frequently the soldier arrives here with several months' pay due him, utterly destitute, wounded, sent to our hospitals in a condition which, more than all others, demands for its relief occasional private expenditures on the part of the sufferers. This is of course impossible, and the men would have to do as best they could, without a single cent, had not His Excellency the Governor put it in my power to relieve them to an extent which has moderately satisfied their requirements.

These personal visits to the bedside of the soldier by a friend, deputed directly by his State to inquire into, report, and relieve his case, goes far to supply that element of cheerfulness which physicians and moralists equally declare is as necessary for the restoration, as for the preservation of health. It is proof to the man that his home has not forgotten him, but that his native State will care for him, since it has opened a direct, because a personal, communication with him.

Large numbers of letters are received from the friends of the soldiers, inquiring after their condition, or containing solicitations of a personal nature. These requests are often very urgent, and bring to light most painful circumstances connected with home relations, such as the barest humanity must heed and yield to. Many require the son's, husband's, brother's or father's presence at home, in that extreme emergency when bitter pangs of separation can be thus assuaged; and if the interests of the service are in no wise impaired by a worthy fellow's brief absence in the discharge of so sacred a privilege, it is surely in the interest of humanity to secure it. After having satisfied myself by every direct and indirect means, that no deception is sought to be practised, and that the claim has real misery to endorse it, I use every exertion in obtaining the requisite relief.

You know, sir, what sorrow can be lightened in this way; but it is impossible to tell one who is not intimately acquainted with hospitals and their phases, how much good can be done in this direction by an earnest, though guarded, man.

There are also constantly occurring deserving cases that demand passes, transfers, and especially discharges, and when they are properly laid before the authorities they usually receive favorable attention. In cases of destitution, free railroad passes are obtained to forward the sufferer to his home.

Discharged soldiers arrive here from Washington and Baltimore, who either have had but little falling due to them at the time of their discharge, or have spent all their pay in excesses. Whenever they present themselves it is in cases of entire destitution, and it becomes my duty to send them home. Frequently it happens that some who are fortunate enough to secure furloughs to visit their homes, have not at the time sufficient means to bear the necessary traveling expenses, though furnished transportation on their furlough. These I assist in the same way as the former.

Another mode in which my personal intercourse with your soldiers enables me to be of service to them, results partly from the prevailing carelessness of the men (till necessity forces the consideration upon them,) in respect to their rights as soldiers, and partly from the shameful advantage that is taken of their ignorance by fellows who convert it into trade capital.

I meet all sorts of questions concerning back pay, papers, descriptive lists, &c., &c., and by furnishing full information with regard to them, I am able to save much to the soldier that would otherwise go to the support of the "sharper." To insure this justice still further, I publish and distribute freely a little "Guide," containing not only all the requisite matter on this point, but also concerning time-tables of railroads, and many other subjects of interest and importance to the soldiers; while any special information that can be obtained from the authorities at Washington is readily at my control, and by this means alone I am given the opportunity of saving or relieving immeasurable anxiety and difficulty.

Mediation between the individual soldier and the Government is further required in cases of alleged mal-treatment or neglect of subordinate officers. That this should occasionally occur, cannot be a matter of great surprise, when remembrance is made of the vast and complicated machinery by which only the extensive sanitary requisitions upon the Government can be filled, and the numerous agents that must carry on the work, very much upon their own responsibilities, and, therefore, very much to their own option. It casts no slur upon the excellence of the Medical Department's constitution, or the general efficiency of its operations, if I am sometimes compelled to exert myself in obtaining redress for what I cannot but feel to be real grievances. On the contrary, it gives me no little gratification to testify to the humanity, courtesy, self-sacrifice and accommodating spirit that have formed the law, and the prevailing intentions of the Faculty, now enlisted in Government service, at least so far as my not inconsiderable intercourse with them has given me to observe.

It would be impossible to give the exact number of New Hampshire men visited and relieved since the establishing of this agency in 1862. In the first place, to the credit of Philadelphia be it said, every Union soldier passing through this city, to or from the seat of war, has received a hearty welcome at our Volunteer Refreshment Saloons, which were established in May, 1861.

It is estimated that upwards of one million of meals have been furnished to the soldiers free of expense to the Government. These institutions are supported entirely by voluntary contributions, and have done much to prove the title of Philadelphia to the name of the "City of Brotherly Love."

Of the soldiers relieved directly by my agency, my lists show the following number of New Hampshire men in hospitals here at the time of my Quarterly Reports:

Reported Jan. 1, 1864, 540 names, giving the disposition of each.

From July 1, 1864, to Oct. 1, 1864, 668 names appear on my list as having been in hospitals here, and which were disposed of as follows:

Returned to duty,	166
Discharged,	3
Transferred,	106
Deserted,*	19
Died,	17
Remaining October 1, 1864,	357
Total,	668

From Oct. 1, 1864, to Jan. 1, 1865, I find 665 names appear on my visiting lists, which are accounted for as follows:

Returned to duty,	116
Discharged,	16
Transferred,	50
Deserted,*	38
Died,	12
Remaining in hospital, January 1, 1865,	433
Total,	665

I have felt it my duty on several occasions to visit the fields immediately after the battles. At Antietam I made two visits, remaining in all about ten days, and was able I trust to relieve much suffering.

Directly after the battle of Gettysburg, I received a telegram from Gov. Gilmore, stating that stores were on the way for the

* A large number of those marked "Deserted" are accounted for, by soldiers who overstay their time while home on furlough.

New Hampshire wounded, and requesting me to use every means to relieve their sufferings. I visited Gettysburg several times, returning with the wounded to Baltimore. I was present also a portion of the time during the removal of the bodies from the battle-field, and was gratified to see the care and attention that was given to the removal of the remains of the brave men who fell in that great struggle to the beautiful spot that has been selected for their last resting place,—the National Cemetery. I pursued a similar course, also, after the battles of Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg, Wilderness; and have several times visited Belle Plain, White House, Fortress Monroe, Norfolk, &c. On visiting the late battle-fields, I have found them wholly and satisfactorily occupied by the larger operations of the Christian and Sanitary Commissions, and have gone hand in hand with these noble agencies, finding no difficulty in obtaining from them anything in their power to grant. Remaining but a few days after obtaining the location of the graves of those who had fallen, to report to their friends, I have returned to this city to await the arrival of the wounded.

Though somewhat out of my department, I have felt that it was the wish of His Excellency to have the New Hampshire soldiers visited and relieved whenever and wherever found. I have made regular visits to the paroled prisoners at Annapolis, taking with me one of my assistants, who has remained to visit each boat load as they arrived from the South, and furnish them with whatever articles they might be in need of. Since the breaking out of the rebellion, I have been constantly brought in contact with sick, wounded and dying men; have seen their sufferings in hospitals, on the battle-field, on the hospital boats, in private houses, and have seen suffering in every form, as terrible, I thought, as it was possible for human beings to bear; but my eyes have never beheld, nor my imagination pictured, such intense agony and suffering as these poor fellows have passed through, caused by the brutal treatment received at the hands of those in charge of the prison-pens of Andersonville and Belle Isle. No words can describe the condition of these men as they are taken from the boat, and none but a heart of stone could but sympathize when looking at those sunken eyes, those maimed, distorted and shrunken bodies of our brave boys brought home to linger and die. They fully appreciate the thoughtfulness of the authorities of their native State in sending those little articles of comfort, to which they have so long been strangers.

I hope that the sum expended by me for your State (an average of about seventy-five dollars per month,) may seem not misapplied, when it is devoted to guarding the interests and alleviating the sufferings of sick and wounded in this personal way. It certainly is an element of sanitary treatment that ought not to be neglected, and I trust that my view of its scopes and bearings will be found to coincide with that which led to the establishing of this agency.

In conclusion, General, accept my thanks for the promptness with which you have always rendered any aid or information required. To this, and the sympathy and energy of His Excellency the Governor, are the New Hampshire soldiers largely indebted for many of their comforts.

I have the honor to remain,
your obedient servant,
ROBERT R. CORSON,
Colonel and State Military Agent.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25, 1865.

Adjutant General Head, Concord, N. H.

GENERAL:—In a review of the action of this agency for the past year, it affords me pleasure to present the following statement of its operations in behalf of New Hampshire soldiers.

With the return of each year the labor of the agency has steadily increased, until the demands upon it have taken every imaginable form of relief. This agency, with the others I have had the honor to represent, has been especially fortunate in its location at the rooms of, and connection with, the New England Soldiers' Relief Association, where its sick, wounded and enfeebled have been tenderly cared and provided for under my own immediate supervision.

Recapitulation of the operations of this Agency from Sept. 1, 1864, to Sept. 1, 1865.

Number of New Hampshire soldiers who have been admitted to U. S. General Hospitals in New York and vicinity, and who have been visited, registered and aided, either directly or indirectly by this agency,	1,096
Number of New Hampshire soldiers who have been under the care of this agency at the New England Soldiers' Relief Association during the past year, and who have been there lodged, provided for, and generally aided,	1,021
Number of returning regiments received and entertained en route for State,	13
Number of men cared and provided for,	4,992
Total number of New Hampshire soldiers who have been visited, registered and aided in Government Hospitals, who have been lodged and generally provided for at the rooms of the New England Soldiers' Relief Association, and who have been received and cared for in returning regiments by this agency during the past year,	7,109
Previously cared for by this agency, and provided for and aided at the New England Rooms,	9,152
Total number under charge of this agency during its existence, without regard to regiments enroute to the field,	16,261

It is impossible to look at the records of a single loyal State without being astounded at the amount of material and energy which has been put forth by our people, and the great and novel labor such numbers have exacted in their proper arrangement and systematizing, without regard to the constant watchful guardianship she exercises over the interests of her troops.

New Hampshire may well be proud of the record of her sons, and of her unswerving fidelity to their interests. May the lessons which their heroism and endurance should inculcate be not lost upon us in our estimation and appreciation of those great principles and privileges which they fought so successfully to maintain and secure.

I have thus given you a condensed exhibit of the workings of this agency for the past year, and which has furnished the material for continuous and earnest labor.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,

FRANK E. HOWE, Military Agent New Hampshire.

REMARKS.

HISTORIES OF REGIMENTS.

I much regret my poor success in obtaining full and complete descriptive matter of the part taken in the many campaigns by our several regiments. I have done all that could be done in the limited space of eight months. It should be remembered that all of our regiments and organizations have for the past year been engaged in an almost unceasing campaign.

The officers have done nobly in furnishing monthly returns. It could hardly be expected that while actively engaged, they could furnish details of operations for the past three years. As the regiments may be expected to arrive home soon I would call the attention of officers and men to the lamentable deficiency which exists at this office, in the history of the part taken by New Hampshire volunteers during the late war. I would urgently solicit their assistance in obtaining the necessary material from which full and complete histories of each organization respectively may be compiled. Many there must be, who have kept private diaries, and others that possess copies of official reports of battles etc.; of those I would make particular request. All private records that I may be permitted to make use of, I will carefully preserve and eventually return them to the original owners: and to such as may render the State important service in furnishing historical material, I will endeavor to have furnished with a copy of the Report of this Department for the year 1866.

ERRORS.

I regret the many and unavoidable errors that exist in this report. Since the major portion of it was printed the muster-out rolls of most of our regiments have been received. On closing the records of members of the several organizations it has been found that large numbers have been erroneously accounted for on the monthly returns.

For instance, many have been reported killed in action, that, were captured by the rebels and afterwards paroled and exchanged; again, many have been incorrectly reported as having deserted from hospitals, thereby rendering lamentable injustice to many deserving soldiers. It is greatly to be regretted that these errors were not made manifest in season for corrections to be made.

In the report for 1866 all known errors will be corrected and explained.

To all whom injustice has been done, I would state that I will cheerfully render them every assistance towards obtaining a proper correction of their individual record.

NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEERS.

Justice demands that I should speak a few words to the credit of the officers and soldiers of New Hampshire regiments whose voluntary duties to the National Government are about terminating. My relation to them, officially, has been of but fourteen months' duration. During that time I may say that I have been in almost daily communication with every New Hampshire organization in the field. My requests of them have been multifarious and incessant; the work that I have occasioned them has been of great magnitude; the character of their services rendered can be perceived on the many hundred pages of this report.

I shall ever be rich in happiness when I reflect upon the relations I have borne towards them. For their courteous treatment, they have my heartfelt gratitude. For their patriotic, heroic, and victorious services to our beloved State and National Union, they have my love. As they return from their victorious campaigns, justly proud with the consciousness of having contributed their valor, strength and personal comfort, towards achieving the series of brilliant victories that have marked the progress of the late gigantic rebellion, with what love, respect and joy, will they be greeted by the, to be made, happy ones at home.

A rich and enviable reward awaits them. The State will delight to honor those who by their valorous service have achieved so much towards the maintenance of our Union and won such imperishable honors to the credit of our people as lovers of loyalty, liberty and justice. The Republic will ever cherish with high regard the welfare and interest of those, who, responsive to her summons, gallantly sprang forward with eager readiness to vindicate her authority and maintain her integrity. The people will ever regard with respect and gratitude those who boldly ventured their lives to maintain Freedom of Government, and to perpetuate the principles of Universal Liberty.

To the sick and wounded in hospital; to the starved and dying at Andersonville, Belle Island and Salisbury; to the slain in battle who strew the ground from Gettysburg to the Gulf, from the Atlantic to the Mississippi; to the lamented dead, I would also bear tribute. As long as the Republic lives and while men have memories, their names will be cherished, honored and respected.

OBLIGATIONS TO ASSISTANTS.

To my chief clerk, Captain Alonzo P. Bacon, I am under great and lasting obligations. He entered this office with myself in March, 1864, and has labored faithfully, arduously and efficiently, in obtaining, perfecting and systematizing the records of New Hampshire's soldiery. To Mr. George F. Lord and to Mr. John M. Haines, I would also acknowledge my thanks for their unremitting and persistent labors.

The State, as well as myself, has been greatly favored by fortune in securing the services of three such efficient and trustworthy assistants; and doubly fortunate in obtaining the services of those who have participated in active campaigns of the late terrible rebellion.

Sympathizing with our volunteers and knowing what should be done to preserve their record, they have with the best of motives, worked with most untiring and energetic perseverance, as is plainly evidenced by the rendition of this voluminous report.

May the success they so richly merit always attend them in the future.

CONCLUSION.

In concluding this lengthy report, I would improve the opportunity to publicly express to your Excellency, my heartfelt thanks for the repeated acts of kindness and encouragement you have shown me during the past year. I would further thank you for the confidence you have reposed in me, and for the assistance you have rendered me on each and every occasion. With the full belief that the people of New Hampshire will ever appreciate the patriotism and wisdom displayed by you in conducting our State through two years of actual and unprecedented war, and with the hope that this report will meet with your approval,

I remain, with the highest respect,

Your Excellency's obedient servent,

NATT HEAD,

Adjutant General.
